IN OLD NEW YORK

THE IRISH DEAD IN TRINITY AND ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARDS

If one were to ask a citizen of New York, even a member of one of its old families supposed to be familiar with its history and traditions, what classes of people comprised the population of the City in the eighteenth century, doubtless he would answer without hesitation, "the Dutch and the English," with no thought in mind of any other people. If he were told that in the very incomplete parish registers of Trinity Church between the years 1746 and 1799 there are recorded the names of several hundred Irish residents of the City, that in the records of other New York churches, the "Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council," the muster rolls of the troops enlisted for the colonial wars, the records of the Surrogates' and Registers' offices, the Tax Department, the newspapers and sundry other eighteenth century records there is a vast number of Irish names, it is probable he would receive the information with unfeigned surprise and incredulity!

The average citizen is not to be criticized for his lack of information in this matter. It is not his fault that he is ignorant of the facts, because historians have created the impression that the Irish did not begin to come to New York until the early part of the nineteenth century. And since the Irish themselves have made no attempt to relate the story of their people and what they may have contributed in a business, social or political way to the City's history, the work of the historians has gone on unchallenged all these years. Even though the descendants of the early Irish immigrants may not have had enough interest in their forebears to prompt them to write their history, there can be no excuse on that score for our Irish-born citizens, and it is certain they have a great deal to answer for in neglecting to supply the omissions of the historians.

When searching for material for a history of the Irish in old New York, I examined the marriage, baptismal and burial records at the Vestry House of Trinity Parish, and copied many of the tombstone inscriptions in the cemeteries adjoining Trinity Church and St. Paul's Chapel, which, as most people know, are on lower Broadway in what is now the busiest section of the busiest City in the world. Much information has been secured from these sources and it has been amplified by other data obtained from various public records. It has been a long and arduous study, but it has been rewarded by the discovery of numerous items of historic interest, which at once prove that not only are the Irish recorded among New York's early settlers and are entitled to consideration by any impartial chronicler, but in many instances, as compared with their Dutch and English neighbors, they measure up to the standards that have been set for these people by certain historians.

Trinity Parish was founded in the year 1696, but its famous church was destroyed twice by fire and the present edifice dates only from the year 1841. Various authorities inform us that New York's first burial ground was at Broadway and Morris Street where the giant Cunard Building now stands, but that in 1676 it was discontinued by order of the "City Fathers," in which year burials were begun in a field on the famous Anneke Jans farm, or what is now Trinity churchyard. For nearly two centuries it was in use continuously as a burial place, and the oldest tombstone inscription now decipherable is that recording the death of a man named Richard Churches on August 5, 1681.

A visit to this corner of "God's Acre" brings one into touch with the early history of New York, and some of the names engraven on the tombstones are at once recognized as of men prominent in the political and commercial life of the City throughout the eighteenth century. The oldest stones are so badly scaled or broken as to render the lettering illegible, and others are sunken so far into the ground that even the uppermost lines of the inscriptions cannot be read. Many different racial strains are represented among those buried in Trinity, principally English, Irish and Dutch, and although Trinity has always been a Protestant Episcopal church, we find Catholics and members of various other religious denominations buried side by side with their fellow citizens of the Protestant faith.

The burial ground is nearly square, and with the church edifice it occupies the entire space on the west side of Broadway from Pine to Rector Streets and from Broadway to Trinity Place. Its gates are closed only at night, and while it is visited by many people from out of town, and for some years past it has been a popular daily resting place, during the noon hour, for numerous people employed in the huge office buildings that surround it on all sides, it is only occasionally that one observes a person sufficiently interested in such things as to stop to read the epitaphs telling of the virtues of the dead.

St. Paul's Chapel, on Broadway between Fulton and Vesey Streets, was erected in the year 1766 and is one of the churches of Trinity Parish. It is the oldest edifice in New York and is said to be the only colonial church in America that stands on its original site. Formerly the grounds of the cemetery reached down to the river front, and one is enabled to form an idea of the small area occupied by the City of New York at the time this church was erected, when we consider that when its site was selected the people thought it was "too far out of town"! The fashionable center of the town at that time was around Hanover Square, and Robert Morris tells of "walking into the country from Queen (now Pearl) Street to see St. Paul's"! "Groves and orchards surrounded the site, cattle wandered about the graveyard, many tall and stately elms and chestnuts grew up around the church and cast a grateful shade, and when it became necessary to sacrifice one of these monarchs of the forest because of age and decay, George P. Morris was stirred to write his famous verse, 'Woodman, spare that Tree'." [1]

The tombstones in St. Paul's churchyard are in about the same general condition as those in Trinity, and they show the same variety of surnames, illustrating the always cosmopolitan population of New York. The oldest stone is that of Francis Dring, who died on July 13, 1767, at the age of 28, and it would be no surprise if we should learn that the deceased was an Irishman, since the surname Dring is quite common in Ireland. Diligent search, however, fails to locate any mention of Francis Dring in the public records.

The inscriptions on the tombstones by no means indicate the number of people of Irish descent who were buried in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards. Through the courtesy of the Vestry Clerks, I have been permitted to make an extensive examination of the records of the parish, in which are recorded the deaths of numerous men, women and children of Irish origin, but whose resting places are not all marked by gravestones. The earliest entry in the records now extant of a burial in Trinity or St. Paul's is dated May 11, 1777. And it is noted with no little interest that an Irish name appears the very next day in the person of "Mrs. Duly," the wife of Dr. John Dooley of New York, who was laid to rest in Trinity churchyard on May 12, 1777.

In 1746 a fire occurred in New York which partly destroyed Trinity Church, and nearly all of the baptismal, marriage and burial records up to that time were consumed in the flames. The church was rebuilt, but on September 21, 1776, when the British army took possession of the City, another conflagration occurred which wiped out almost the entire City from Broadway west to the Hudson River; Trinity Church was completely destroyed and the only one of the vital records prior to that date which escaped destruction was a marriage register running back to 1746. The first entry in this record is the marriage of William Crillen and Mary Champness on January 4, 1746, and the third entry is that of the marriage of Hugh Kelly and Elizabeth Griffin on November 30th, in the same year.

There is another lapse in the burial records, not resulting from fire. A notation in the Registry says that "when Dr. Inglis (Rector of Trinity) went to Nova Scotia in 1783, he took away his records of baptisms, marriages and burials, claiming they belonged to England." Since his term in the rectorship was from 1777 to 1783, it is clear that another large part of the records is also missing. And besides these, the burial register shows a still further lapse in the original records, from 1784 to 1800, because of their destruction by fire.

The original burial records consist of a number of small bound books, many of them with parchment leaves, and as the entries were made by the different rectors and their assistants in India ink, the writing is still quite distinct, although the spelling of names in many cases appears curious in these modern days. However, that is a peculiarity which applies to all of our early public records. Here we find entries relating to the rich and the poor, the high and the low, "inhabitants" and unknown "strangers," following one another in regular succession. The names of men and women who attained sufficient prominence as to be mentioned in histories of the City of New York, merchants, doctors, lawyers, public officials and officers of the American and British armies of the Revolution are entered in juxtaposition with the poor and less favored elements of the community, illustrating the truth of the old saying that "death is no respecter of persons," and that "all human beings are alike in the sight and love of God."

The original records were transcribed into large volumes called "A Registry of Burials," thus rendering them much more convenient for research work, since the entries in the Registry are verbatim copies of the originals. The entries usually consist of the date of burial, the name of the deceased (where known), his or her age, whether an "inhabitant" or a "stranger," the cause of death and the cemetery where interred, but there is a very large number of cases where the names of the deceased persons are not recorded at all. For example, the total number of burials entered in the first volume of the Registry, covering the period May 11, 1777, to December 31, 1813, is 9703, and of these, in approximately 4500 cases only, or about 46% of the total, the names of the deceased are shown. The other entries appear in this way: "a child" of "Mr." or "Mrs." So-and-So, "a soldier's child," "a refugee," "a poor person," "a woman," "a man," "a soldier," "a sailor," and so on. During the last quarter of the eighteenth century there were several epidemics of sickness in New York, and "the great yellow fever scare" will be recalled by all readers of history. This undoubtedly accounts for such a large proportion of the entries appearing without names, and why in so many cases there are no tombstones over the graves. It is probable that great numbers of the victims were buried in a common grave.

Despite the almost entire destruction of the records prior to 1776 and for a large part of the succeeding quarter of a century, it is remarkable to find what great numbers of Irish people were associated in one way or another with Trinity Parish in the eighteenth century. Judging by their names, and notwithstanding the probability that some of them became regular attendants at Trinity Church, I venture to say that most of these people originally were Catholics. We learn that "until the close of the Revolutionary War, and while the English laws were in force in the country, no Catholic clergyman was allowed to officiate in this State," [2] and a New York historian, in referring to religions in colonial days, says, "a man did not dare avow himself a Catholic; it was odious and a chapel then would have been pulled down." [3]

In the year 1700 a law was passed by the Provincial Legislature which condemned to perpetual imprisonment any "Papist priests and Jesuits" found in the Colony of New York, and this law was not repealed until 1784. Under the State Constitution of 1777, Catholics were excluded from the privileges of citizenship and were required "to abjure and renounce all allegiance and subjection to all and every foreign king, prince, potentate and state, in all matters ecclesiastical and civil." Under such conditions, the Irish Catholics in New York, having neither priests nor churches of their own faith to commune with, had no means of practicing their religion, but, being a traditionally religious people, it is evident that many of them decided to attend the Episcopal Church, which, in its beliefs and tenets, is the closest approach to Catholicity.

Some Catholic writers, with only a superficial knowledge of the facts and who evidently did not consult original records, insist upon saying that the Irish immigrants apostasized, and with a faint show of sympathy for these unfortunate exiles, they deplore the great loss which the Church has suffered as a result of their alleged apostasy. I regard it as an injustice to the memories of men and women who sacrificed and suffered so much for their faith, and many of whom were driven from the homeland by religious and political persecutions, to say that they voluntarily apostasized on their settlement in this country. Some may have done so; of that there can be little doubt. But, there was no formal or deliberate abandonment of their faith on the part of the bulk of the Irish Catholic immigrants; they simply drifted gradually into association with their neighbors of other religious beliefs, because they could not help it, and eventually they and their children joined whatever church happened to be in their locality and thus became absorbed in an overwhelming Protestantism. But that fact did not de-Irishize them, since religion and nationality are not synonymous.[4]

[4] Rupp, a Pennsylvania historian, relates how the Irish Catholic pioneer settlers of Lancaster and Cumberland Counties and other parts of that Province continued the use of the Catholic prayer-books and the Rosaries that they brought from Ireland, while at the same time they went on Sundays to the services in the Protestant or Lutheran church, because there was no other church in their locality.

On the other hand, the "Scotch-Irish" theorists seldom fail to call attention to "the great numbers of Protestant descendants of the immigrants from Ireland," as "proof" in support of their contention that these people belonged to that nebulous race combination called "Scotch-Irish." Henry Cabot Lodge said[5] that General John Sullivan was "a Scotch-Irishman" and another pretentious "historian" so referred to Captain Jeremiah O'Brien,[6] solely on the ground that both were non-Catholic! And not long ago an official of a Southern historical society called me to account because I said, in an article in the Journal of the American Irish Historical Society, that John Barnwell[7] of South Carolina, one of the several Irish ancestors of Theodore Roosevelt, was an Irishman. He gravely "informed" me that "Barnwell was not an Irishman; he was a Protestant!" Such an assertion is so obviously ridiculous as to make comment unnecessary.

We have an example of a Catholic Irishman attending Trinity Church in the case of John Leary, who was in business in New York for many years. According to the will of "John Bogert of the City of New York, Gentleman," dated December 11, 1769, he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Bogert;[8] one of their children was buried in Trinity churchyard and there is a stone over her grave bearing the following inscription: "Here lies the body of Mary Leary, Daughter of John and Elizabeth Leary, died Sept. 21st, 1762, aged 5 years, 4 months." This John Leary seems to have begun his career as a jockey,[9] but it is evident he became a prosperous owner of horses himself, since he appears occasionally in the newspapers as an entrant for the races at the Newmarket course on Hempstead Plains, and in the New York Mercury of May 4, 1767, there is an article on horse breeding by "John Leary, a lover of the turf." He kept a livery stable on Leary Street,[10] a few doors from Broadway, during and subsequent to the Revolution. An historian of the Catholic Church in America informs us that he was a Catholic and that "John Leary used to go once a year to Philadelphia (where an English Catholic priest used to make occasional visits), to attend the holy sacrifice of the Mass." [11] Doubtless, it was at Easter time he took the journey, since Catholics have ever regarded the performance of their "Easter Duty" as one of the most solemn obligations imposed on them, unless physically prevented from doing so.

There is nothing to indicate how long John Leary continued to attend the services at Trinity Church, but it is interesting to note that he returned to the faith of his fathers, for two years after St. Peter's Catholic Church was established (1786) he was a communicant at the new church, and in all likelihood remained a faithful adherent until his death. James and William Leary, brother and son respectively of John Leary, were in business in Maiden Lane, and there is a record of the burial of James in Trinity churchyard on September 26, 1781. James Leary, presumed to be the brother of John, was married to Sarah Boonrepo at the Presbyterian church on July 9, 1761, and a John Leary was married at Trinity to Elizabeth Dixon on June 2, 1774.

[9] James Grant Wilson, in his Memorial History of New York, refers to him as "John Leary, the jockey of the day," who won a famous race at Newmarket course at Hempstead Plains in the year 1753. The winner's prize was "a bowl," which however was demanded from Leary by one Watts, a friend of General Monckton, commander of the English troops, but which Leary "refused to surrender even under threats of the terrors of the law," and "five years later Leary was still tenacious." The Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council (Vol. V, p. 351) show that John Leary was appointed "Constable of the West Ward" on October 14, 1751, and at the same meeting the Council appointed William Flannigan, "Constable of the East Ward" with Hugh Rafter as "Deputy Constable," and Hugh Mulligan, "Deputy Constable of the Dock Ward."

[10] The name of this street was changed to Cortlandt by order of the Common Council, but the wharf at the foot of the street, for many years afterwards, continued to be known as "Leary's Dock."

William Leary was New York's "Town-Major" in the years 1775 and 1776, and in Force's American Archives [12] and the Journals of the Provincial Congress [13] may be found several references to him indicating that he was an active partisan of the patriot cause in the days of the Revolution. The New York Provincial Congress on March 14, 1776, issued an order "that William Leary, Town-Major, be allowed the pay of a Captain in the Continental Establishment," and he continued in that post until the British took possession of the City in September, 1776, when he was compelled to leave. That he also attended Trinity Church would appear from the fact that he was a signer of one of the petitions later alluded to. There are entries of other people of the name in New York records, but there is no means of identifying them with any of the foregoing Learys.

Another example of an Irish Catholic attending Trinity Church is the case of William Mooney, best known to fame as the founder in the year 1786 of the "Society of Tammany or Columbian Order." The objects of the Society, as stated in the language of its founder, seem to be worth recalling here. They were: "the smile of charity, the chain of friendship, the flame of liberty, and in general whatever may tend to perpetuate the love of freedom and political advantages of the country." It was not until after the Revolution that the first Catholic congregation in New York was formed, the first church was incorporated on June 10, 1785, and services were held at Vauxhall Gardens at Warren and Greenwich Streets, and in the next year St. Peter's Church in Barclay Street was erected. It is evident that, like John Leary, William Mooney then returned to his former obeisance, since he was a regular communicant at St. Peter's in 1789, and the very first entry in the records of St. Peter's Church, i.e., under date of April 13, 1789, shows that William Mooney was appointed one of the trustees of the parish.[14]

Myer, in his history of the Tammany Society, states that Mooney was a soldier in the British army, but deserted in 1776 and joined the American army. I can find no authority for that assertion, and as a matter of fact it is known that Mooney was a member of the Sons of Liberty and tradition says he was one of the band of patriots who destroyed the statue of George the Third on Bowling Green on the 9th of July, 1776. That he was in New York in 1777, and probably was then attending Trinity Church, may be assumed from the entry of his marriage to Abigail Blake in the parish records of April 24th in that year, and one of his children was buried in the cemetery adjoining St. Paul's Chapel in Trinity Parish in the year 1781. In 1780 I find an advertisement by William Mooney showing that he was then in business as an upholsterer in William Street. All of this indicates that Myer was in error in assuming that Mooney served in the Revolutionary army.

It would appear that Mooney was a member of Trinity Church up to 1784. Among the historic documents on file at the State Library in Albany, document number 2405 is a "Petition (to the Legislature) for Confirmation of Certain Wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church," which was "read and approved by a Committee of the Whole House" on February 24, 1784. This petition was signed by 110 parishioners of Trinity Parish and among its signers were: William Mooney, Patrick McDavitt, Patrick Dennis, John Conway, Peter Hughes, John Fleming, Edward Phelan and William Leary.

There is also at the State Library a "Petition of the Old Vestry (of Trinity) and their Friends for the Endowment of a Separate Church," comprised of six documents numbered 2406 to 2411 inclusive. The petition was presented to the Legislature in February, 1784, and was read and passed by the Senate on March 5th of that year. It was signed by 376 persons, one of whom was William Mooney, and it is interesting to note among them men bearing such names as:

Robert Carr
John Fleming
Anthony Ford
John Healy
Philip Kearny
William Kelly
Thomas Lowrey
Thomas Lynch
William McCarter
John McClenahan
Robert McCormick
Benjamin McDowell

At least twenty-three of the thirty-eight signatories to these petitions are known to have been natives of Ireland, and it will hardly be questioned that people who sprang from such old Irish families, as the names of most of those mentioned in this book indicate, were Catholics, at least prior to their emigration to this country. But, the fact that so many of them attended churches not of their own faith need not be surprising. In my researches for the history of the early Irish settlers in America, I have found thousands of similar instances in other parts of the Colonies, and in many of these cases it is stated specifically by their descendants that originally they were Catholics. But, because of the vicissitudes of the time, they were virtually compelled to attend churches not of their own faith; their children had to be baptized in those churches, their marriages were solemnized therein and their dead were buried with Protestant rites. So it is an easy matter to understand why so many of the Irish Catholic settlers and their descendants, in course of time, drifted into communion with those of other religious beliefs.

With the exception of the Patrick Crawford later referred to, the earliest period in which it can be found Irish people were associated with Trinity Church was in 1711. Dr. Morgan Dix says in his history of the parish that among those who "subscribed towards building the steeple" in May of that year were Thomas Tarpey, Thomas Kearny, John McLennan, John Corbett, John Reynolds, John Moore, Patrick McKnight, Edward Foy, John Dongan and "Anna Maria Burck." Of these, Thomas Tarpey was a merchant, and in the New York Colonial Manuscripts [15] may be seen a copy of a petition to the "Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations" dated February 10, 1711, by a number of "Merchants and Traders residing in the City of New York," which was signed by Thomas Tarpey and Rickard Burke. Tarpey lived to a great age and was buried in Trinity churchyard. In the New York Gazette and Weekly Post-Boy of April 23, 1750, there was an announcement that "on Wednesday evening last there departed this Life Mr. Thomas Tarpey, a Native of Ireland, aged upwards of 100 years, formerly a considerable merchant of this City, but for many years, in the latter Part of his Life, liv'd, retir'd. He was always accounted a very upright honest man."

"Anna Maria Burck" was the wife of Rickard Burke, who died in 1714, and at the Surrogate's office there is an entry showing that letters of administration to "the estate of Rickard Burck of New York, merchant, who died intestate," were granted to "his wife, Anna Maria Burck," on November 19, 1714.[16] As "Anna Maria Burke," her death on April 21, 1740, at the age of sixty-eight, is recorded on the tombstone of the Marshall family in Trinity churchyard. Her will,[17] probated before the Surrogate of New York County on May 29, 1740, shows that she married (1) Edward Marshall and (2) Rickard Burke, and among the legatees she named her four children, John and Susannah Marshall, and Anne and Mary Burke, and her "cousin, Anna Maria Burke." Rickard Burke was long a resident of New York and is first mentioned in records of the year 1710. At the Register's office there is recorded a deed[18] as of June 18, 1714, covering the transfer of property in Queen Street purchased by Rickard Burke from Dirck Egberston, and there is also a deed recorded as of April 27, 1723, by which Abraham DeLanoy and his wife, Janet, conveyed to "Anna Maria Burke of the City of New York, Widow," a house and plot of ground in Queen Street for £500.[19] This ground is now part of the open space in Hanover Square, which at that time was the fashionable center of the town. And in another deed dated June 26, 1730, covering property in Queen Street, Anne and Mary Burke are described as "daughters and heirs at law of Rickard Burke, deceased." [20] There is no mention in the records of his nationality, but his given name justifies the assumption that he was of the Clanrickard family of Burkes of County Mayo, Ireland.

The Thomas Kearny who "subscribed towards building the steeple" seems to have been a man of large business interests for his time, since his advertisements in the newspapers show that he combined the business of merchant, real estate agent and auctioneer. A New Jersey historian says he was a brother of Michael and Philip Kearny, natives of Cork, Ireland, who came to Philadelphia in the year 1700, later settling in Perth Amboy, N. J., and that Michael "probably was engaged as a merchant with offices in New York City." [21] James Grant Wilson also intimates that Michael Kearny was in business in New York, since, in referring to horse-racing in the vicinity of New York in the middle of the eighteenth century, he mentions "Michael Kearny, Irish-born, who married a daughter of Lewis Morris and was ancestor of the distinguished Phil Kearny of military fame," among "the gentlemen of New York who were keen for the sport." However, one of the living descendants of Michael Kearny [23] informs me there is some doubt as to this close relationship, for although Michael and Philip Kearny did have a brother named Thomas, there is nothing in the family papers indicating that he resided in New York. Michael Kearny was one of the most prominent public men of his time in New Jersey, having held the offices of Secretary, Treasurer and Surrogate of the Province of East Jersey. His descendants married into leading New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania families, and he was the ancestor of some distinguished Americans, among them Major-General Philip Kearny, a native of New York, Commodore Lawrence Kearny of the United States Navy, General John Watts Kearny and others of the name who are mentioned in official records and in numerous historical and genealogical works.

Thomas Kearny was admitted a Freeman of the City of New York in 1710.[24] He had a pew in Trinity Church and is supposed to have been buried in the Kearny family plot in the churchyard, where the body of General Philip Kearny was first buried when removed from the battlefield of Chantilly, Va., in the year 1862.[25] Philip Kearny (the third of the name in America), father of the General, married a daughter of John Watts, the last Royal Governor of New York, whose statue stands in Trinity churchyard. This Philip Kearny is referred to by Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, in her History of the City of New York, as "an eminent and wealthy lawyer who filled many public stations." He was buried in the Kearny plot in Trinity churchyard. Another Philip Kearny, of Perth Amboy, N. J., was buried in the Kearny plot, and the inscription on the headstone states he died in the year 1816. Robert M. Kearny was also buried in Trinity churchyard on September 29, 1816, but there is no stone marking his grave.

Of the others who "subscribed towards building the steeple," John Dongan was a nephew of the celebrated Thomas Dongan, Governor of the Province of New York (1683-1688), who was a native of Castletown, County Kildare, Ireland. John Dongan had a town house in New York and a country home in Staten Island, and after the death of his son, Colonel Thomas Dongan, in 1768, his residence "in the Broad Way" was advertised for sale by James Duane, the family attorney. Patrick McKnight and John McLennan were New York merchants; John Corbett was "Alderman of the South Ward," having been elected to that post on September 29, 1702, but of Moore, Reynolds and Foy, no information is available.

Another entry in the parish records of the month of July, 1736, quoted by Dr. Dix, relates to a fund raised "towards enlarging the church," and among the contributors to this fund there were three Irishmen, John Kelly, James Darcy and Thomas Lynch. Kelly was a leading lawyer and is mentioned frequently in the public records of his day. He also was buried in Trinity and a notice of his death in the New York Mercury of June 15, 1767, referred to him as "John Kelly, Esq., for many years a Lawyer in this City," who "by his Frugality and Industry, acquired a comfortable Independency, without making a Market of the Miseries of his Fellow Creatures; he lived an honest Man and died a good Christian."

The Thomas Lynch referred to was a merchant, formerly of Providence, Rhode Island. The period of his settlement in New York is unknown, but that it was sometime subsequent to June, 1714, would appear from a power of attorney from "James Smith of the Island of St. Thomas" to "Ulick Lynch [26] of the City of New York, Merchant," authorizing him "to ask, demand and receive of Mr. Thomas Lynch, heretofore of Barbadoes and now of Road Island, Merchant, all summes of money, goods, wares, effects and merchandise which the said Thomas Lynch is indebted to him on account of a certain shipment of goods consigned by the said Smith." This instrument was dated June 20, 1714, and is recorded at the office of the Register for the City and County of New York.[27] Lynch married Margaret, daughter of Abraham Riker of Newtown, Long Island, the first of the noted Riker family in America, and according to his will, probated in the New York Surrogate's Court on April 25, 1740,[28] he lived with his family in Beaver Street, his house and garden having been the present site of the Produce Exchange building. By his will Lynch divided his property between his wife, his son Nicholas and his daughters, Constantia and Mary; he appointed his "friend Anthony Duane," executor, and two of the witnesses to the instrument were John Reade and John Kelly. There can be very little doubt that he was buried in Trinity, since there was a Lynch family vault in the churchyard, but the absence of the records of the period preclude our verifying that assumption. One year after his death, Lynch's widow became the wife of Anthony Duane.

There were many other Lynchs in New York, and although their names do not appear in the existing burial records there can be little doubt that some of them found their final resting places in Trinity or St. Paul's churchyard. The first of the name on record was one Gabriel Lynch, who died intestate in New York and there is a record at the Surrogate's office under date of September 3, 1671, of the appointment of his widow, "Margaret Lynch, Administratrix of the estate of Gabriel Lynch of Newtown." [29] The next appearance of the name in the public records was in 1698, in the person of Thomas Lynch, described as a "Mariner of New York," after whose death letters of administration were granted to his wife, Ann, on March 31, 1698, by authority of the Governor; and on October 3, 1698, "Ann Lynch came into Court with an inventory of the estate of Captain Thomas Lynch and made oath to the correctness of the account." [30]

Lynch is a name that appears frequently in old New York records. It occurs twenty-four times in the records of deeds and conveyances between 1714 and 1800; nine Lynches were married at Trinity between 1755 and 1796, and at least twenty-two persons of the name were buried in Trinity churchyard. There are stones over the graves of Cornelius, Philip, Francis and John P. Lynch, who were buried in Trinity between 1753 and 1815, and during the first quarter of the nineteenth century the name appears ten times in the burial registers. Cornelius Lynch was a versatile eighteenth century schoolmaster of the City of New York. As early as 1740 he had a school in Stone Street, and in one of his advertisements in the year 1748 he announced that he was prepared "to teach writing, arithmetic, vulgar and decimal fractions, navigation, guaging, surveying, dialling, mensuration and merchants' accounts," and according to the inscription on his tombstone, he died on May 12, 1753, in the 45th year of his age. Philip Lynch was a merchant and importer and the inscription on his tombstone says he died on April 23, 1776. In addition to these, the parish records contain such entries as the following, all covering burials in Trinity churchyard:

1777, September 2—"A child of Mrs. Lynch, an inhabitant, age 8 years"
1777, October 9—"A child of Peter Lynch, a stranger, age 2 months"
1779, January 1—"Mrs. Lynch, a stranger, age 29 years"
1779, August 8—"A child of Mrs. Lynch, age 10 months"
1781, August 13—"A child of Mrs. Lynch, age 14 months"
1783, July 14—"A child of Mrs. Lynch"
1801, April 25—"Mrs. Lynch, age 23"

The burial in Trinity churchyard of "Major Lynch" is recorded in the Burial Register under date of July 25, 1782, and in Rivington's Gazette of July 27th in that year may be seen the following announcement: "On Wednesday the 24th inst., departed this life in the 43rd year of his age, Major John Lynch. He was descended from a very ancient family in the Kingdom of Ireland and his death is most sincerely regretted by his relatives and friends. His remains were on Thursday evening attended at Trinity Church by the Gentlemen of the Army and many respectable inhabitants of the City, and interred in the family vault of Mr. Thomas Lynch." In Gaine's paper of August 5, 1782, "Thomas Lynch, Administrator of the estate of the late John Lynch," advertised for sale a farm of seventy-six acres "at Southwood, Long Island, on the road from Hempstead Plains to Far Rockaway," and also the horses, carriages, farm implements, household goods and sundry property of the deceased.

This Thomas Lynch was a shipping agent and importer for many years in Dock Street. He advertised extensively between 1768 and 1781 sales of Irish manufactured goods, and seems to have been especially interested in vessels plying between Ireland and the port of New York, and some of his advertisements show that he was engaged in bringing emigrants from Ireland and defraying the cost of their transportation, and then disposing of their "time" to employers of labor. A Mrs. Catherine Lynch, who advertised frequently from "her store in Leary Street" and later in Broad Street, seems also to have been interested in bringing over Irish emigrants, as will be noted from the following announcement which appeared in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of June 14, 1773: "Just arrived from Cork in the brigantine Galway Packet, Huge Fallon, Master, a number of healthy men and women Servants and Redemptioners, whose freights are payable to Mrs. Catherine Lynch in Broad Street, or the Captain on board said brigantine. Among said servants are smiths, taylors, weavers, shoemakers, wool combers and dyers, labourers, cutlers, a buckle maker and a bleacher, and several women that can cook, attend children, wash and iron, use the needle," etc.

In 1708 one Anthony Lynch was made a "Freeman" of the City. He married (1) a daughter of Abraham Riker and (2) a daughter of Rip Van Dam, and since the first mentioned Thomas Lynch also married into the Riker family,[31] it is entirely probable they were relatives, perhaps

[31] A number of Irish people were married into the Riker family. Catherine Riker married Captain Dennis Condry on August 30, 1762; Elizabeth Riker married Captain George Collins on April 27, 1764; Peter Riker married Mary Kelly, daughter of Captain Edward Kelly, on May 19, 1782; another of the Rikers, Gertrude, married Michael Hines; Jane Riker became the wife of Captain John O'Brien on August 2, 1793, and they were the parents of Jane O'Brien, wife of the distinguished American artist, Henry Inman. Another of the Rikers became the wife of Dr. William J. MacNeven, the Irish patriot, whose monument stands in brothers. Anthony Lynch occupied a prominent place among New York's citizens in the opening years of the eighteenth century, and that he was active in the politics of the day may be assumed from the fact that on September 29, 1710, he was elected by the Common Council "Assessor for the South Ward"; on the same date two years later "Assessor for the East Ward," and on September 29, 1715, "Collector of the East Ward." [32] In the will of "Anthony Lynch of New York, merchant," dated December 12, 1716, he named his wife, Mary, his son, Peter, and daughters, Sarah and Mary, legatees of his real and personal estate and he appointed as his executors Thomas Lynch, Thomas Tarpey, Rip Van Dam, Sr., and Rip Van Dam, Jr. Rip Van Dam, father-in-law of Anthony Lynch, was one of the leading citizens of New York in his day, a member of the Common Council for thirty years and its president in 1731. He lived at the corner of Nassau Street and Maiden Lane, which at that time was one of "the social centres" for New York "society." Peter Lynch, son of Anthony, was made a "Freeman" of the City in 1734, and on October 15, 1739, "Constable for the East Ward." [33] In 1737 his name appears as one of the signers to a petition demanding the removal from office of the sheriff, William Cosby, and among other signers of the petition were

There was another Peter Lynch, "hat manufacturer at the sign of the Gold Lace Hat, 28 Queen Street," who frequently advertised his business in the newspapers between 1777 and 1786. But, perhaps the most noted man of the name in New York was Dominick Lynch, a native of Galway, Ireland. Accounts of him say he amassed a great fortune as a merchant in Flanders, and in 1783 he came to New York and in partnership with Thomas Stoughton he established here the importing firm of Lynch and Stoughton. It is said that Lynch brought with him to America such a large amount of specie that the event created a considerable stir in New York financial circles. He purchased large tracts of land in New York State, one of which he laid out in lots in 1796 and named the place "Lynchville," but later changed it to Rome, its present name. About the close of the eighteenth century he purchased an estate on Long Island Sound in Westchester County, where he built a magnificent stone residence and entertained there on a lavish scale. He is said to have been a generous benefactor to the poor and to the Catholic Church, and was one of the principal factors in the building of St. Peter's church in Barclay Street in 1786. He is also noted as the first to introduce Italian opera in the United States, which he did at his own expense in the year 1824. James Grant Wilson refers to him as "one of New York's leading citizens," and his wife as one of "the principal ladies of the City" who were a committee "to pay their devoirs to the amiable consort of the President," on the day when Washington entered New York in 1789 to be inaugurated. His descendants for several generations are mentioned among the leaders of New York society, and one of his sons, Dominick, is spoken of in local annals as "the most fashionable man of his day in New York." Between 1789 and 1824, Dominick Lynch, Sr., and his wife, Jane, appear sixty-eight times in the records of deeds and conveyances of the City of New York, and at the Register's office may also be seen as many as 275 legal instruments, occupying seven full pages of the records, all executed by Henry O. Lynch and his wife, Mary, in the years 1824 and 1825!

Among the "Wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church" there were several native Irishmen, as well as others who probably were of Irish descent. Listed under this head we find the following Vestrymen:

Patrick Crawford, 1704
John McEvers, 1726 to 1751
John Moore, 1728 to 1750
Anthony Duane, 1732 to 1747
Thomas Moore, 1750 to 1762
James Duane, 1772 to 1777
Hercules Mulligan, 1784 to 1787
Hugh Gaine, 1792 to 1808
John McVickar, 1801 to 1812
Charles McEvers, 1800 to 1808
Peter Mackie, 1812 to 1814
William Moore, 1814 to 1824
Cornelius R. Duffie, 1817 to 1823

Of those above listed, Crawford, McVickar, John McEvers, Mulligan, Gaine and Anthony Duane were natives of Ireland. Crawford was sometimes recorded Patrick Crumford and Patrick Cummerford. James Duane was a son of Anthony, and while very little is known of the others, their names justify the assumption that they were of Irish origin. McVickar came to New York from Ireland about the time of the Revolution and was one of the founders of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in 1784 and was its vice-president in 1797. In Barrett's Old Merchants of New York it is stated that the house established by McVickar, first in Maiden Lane and afterwards in Queen (Pearl) Street, did the largest mercantile business in New York. He became a very wealthy man, was a director of the Bank of New York and of the first Insurance companies established in New York, the "Mutual" and "United," was interested financially in several other concerns and was a large giver to charity. He married Ann Moore, a sister of Lady Dongan, wife of John Charlton Dongan, grandson of the celebrated Governor Dongan, and McVickar's sons married into such families as the Constables, Bards, Lawrences, Jays and Livingstons.

In Trinity churchyard may be seen a stone over the vault of the above mentioned John McEvers, and the remains of his son, Charles, were placed in the same vault. In the will of John McEvers dated April 28, 1751, he requested that his body "be laid in my vault in the Trinity churchyard by the side of my late wife, Catherine". Father and son were in partnership in Hanover Square as importers of European and Indian goods and their advertisements in the newspapers indicate that they were also large importers of "Irish linens and dimities". John McEvers was one of New York's public-spirited citizens and is mentioned frequently in the City records. He owned large tracts of land in Middlesex County, New Jersey, and his will, recorded in that County,[33a] shows that he divided his estate among his four sons and four daughters.

Anthony Duane was a junior officer on an English warship which was stationed in New York harbor in 1698, in which year he abandoned the naval service and entered commercial life in New York. In 1717 he was made a "Freeman." He is described in a genealogical history of the family as "one of the best known men of his day in New York, of fine appearance and highly educated," and was noted for his progressiveness and as a generous benefactor of Trinity Church. There are many deeds recorded in the names of Anthony Duane and his sons covering transactions in New York real estate, the earliest being a deed dated October 16, 1718, from "John Kelly of the City of New York, Merchant, and his wife, Catherine Kelly," to Anthony Duane covering the sale of a house and lot in Queen Street.[34]

Anthony Duane seems to have invested heavily in New York real estate, and there is a record of the purchase by him in the year 1741 of 6000 acres of land at what is now Duanesburg, Schoharie County. It is interesting to learn that a son of Anthony Duane was the owner of the land that is now embraced in Gramercy Park. It was acquired by James Duane by two deeds from Gerardus Stuyvesant, grandson of the famous Peter Stuyvesant,[35] both dated July 22, 1761, and was known originally as "Gramercy Seat" and also as "the Duane farm," and when the Duanes cultivated this farm it was in the "country" and much of Manhattan Island was covered with dense woods! On December 29, 1763, James Duane bought ten acres adjoining [36] and again on March 2, 1786, six and one-third acres,[37] both from John Watts, and James Duane owned in all twenty-seven acres of land in this vicinity, which today is worth many millions of dollars. After his death in 1797, the property was divided among his heirs, from whom it was purchased in the year 1831 by Samuel D. Ruggles, who converted part of it into a private residential park which it has since remained.

Of the several sons of Anthony Duane, James was the most famous. He was born in New York in 1732 and his biographer [38] expresses it as his belief that he was educated by Revd. Richard Charlton, a countryman of his father,[39] and one of the executors of his will, who at that time conducted a classical school in New York and the "Charity School" attached to Trinity Church. In 1759 James Duane married Maria, daughter of Robert Livingston, a lawyer in whose office he studied law, and "quickly attained high rank in the profession on account of his scholarship and judicial ability." He increased the paternal estate at Duanesburg and in 1765 he brought over some Irish, Scotch and German families, gave them generous leases and actively coöperated with them in the establishment of a model settlement. In public affairs he had a distinguished record, and throughout the Revolution he was indefatigable in his efforts to carry the struggle to a successful end. He was a member of the Committee of One Hundred which took over the government of New York in 1775, of the Committee of Safety and of the Continental Congress (1774 to 1784), but is perhaps best known to New Yorkers as the first Mayor of the City after the Revolution. He reached that distinction on February 7, 1784, a memorable day in the history of the City, having been the beginning of local government with an American in the Mayor's chair; it was the day on which the Chamber of Commerce was incorporated, the Custom House was established and the National Congress was transferred from Philadelphia to New York.

Cornelius, son of Anthony Duane, also attended Trinity Church. He served in the French-English war, and in the "Land Papers" at the office of the Secretary of State there is a petition dated December 30, 1765, by a number of ex-officers of New York Provincial troops "for a grant of land to each pursuant to the royal proclamation." Among the signers of this petition were Cornelius Duane, James Fitzpatrick, Michael McLaughlin, Robert Maginnis, Barnaby Byrne and William Hogan. Cornelius Duane was a lawyer and real estate promoter, but although in thorough sympathy with the patriot Cause he did not take an active part in the Revolutionary conflict. He remained in the City to look after his property, but under the surveillance of the military authorities, and he died on March 8, 1781, "as a result of the treatment he received at the hands of the British." There is an entry in the burial records showing that he was buried in Trinity churchyard on March 10, 1781. John, another son of Anthony Duane, enlisted in the colonial army, fought at the defense of Fort Oswego in 1755, and died of disease contracted in that campaign.

The Duanes may be classed among New York's distinguished families of the colonial period, and the name is perpetuated in our present Duane Street. It is strange that while all historians of the City of New York mention Anthony Duane, not one of them makes the slightest reference to his origin or the country of his nativity, and in saying that he was an officer on an English warship they leave it to their readers to assume that he was an Englishman! So, as in the case of many other old Americans of Irish descent, bearing names of apparent English sound or appearance, I venture to say that, in the minds of many readers of history, Anthony and James Duane are classified among the "Anglo-Saxons"! But, all of the authorities agree that the Duane family has been in Ireland "since time immemorial" and that the name is a corruption of the original Gaelic form, O'Dubhain (pronounced O-duwain). It is one of the many Irish names which, in the mutations of time, have become so completely anglicized as to be unrecognizable as Irish to people unacquainted with Irish family nomenclature, and among its variants are such present-day names as Devan, Dewane, Doane and Downs. According to O'Hart,[40] the O'Dubhains were a Connacht Clan descended from the O'Haras of Galway, and in Burke's General Armory may be seen the Irish coat of arms of the Duanes, which is said to have been made from a drawing of the arms on a seal used by Anthony Duane. Revd. Patrick Woulfe says O'Dubhain is "the name of several distinct families," whom he places in Meath, Cork, Limerick and Galway, and in referring to the Connemara branch, from which, doubtless, Anthony Duane sprang, he says it is "an old family in that district and still well represented, but the name is sometimes made Devaney in English, as happens sometimes also in Mayo." [41] Anthony Duane was born in the village of Cong,[42] which is situate in both the Counties of Mayo and Galway, in the year 1678 and died in New York in 1747. By his will dated July 13, 1745, on record at the Surrogate's Court,[43] he divided his estate among his wife and sons, Abraham, Richard, John, James and Cornelius. It is said that he also was buried in Trinity churchyard, but of that there can be no certainty because of the destruction of the records.

Four of the five Irish military officers who joined with Cornelius Duane in the petition of December 30, 1765, lived in New York and two of them, Barnaby Byrne and Robert Maginnis, were buried in Trinity churchyard. Byrne was Captain of a company of militia raised in Queens County, and a muster of his company in March, 1760, shows that 42 of its 93 men were natives of Ireland, and of 97 men under his command in April, 1761, 43 of them are recorded as "born in Ireland," and, all told, he had in his command in those two years 79 natives of Ireland![43a] After the war Byrne became a resident of New York and had a country estate at Jamaica, Long Island, and his marriage to Jane Thodey, daughter of Colonel Michael Thodey, is recorded at the Vestry House of Trinity Parish under date of March 21, 1763. He died in 1771 and was buried in Trinity churchyard, but there is no stone marking his grave. His wife survived him by forty-four years, and there is an entry in the burial register covering the burial in Trinity churchyard on December 5, 1815, of "Jane Byrne, age 83." His will dated March 6, 1771, on file at the Surrogate's office, mentions among the legatees his wife, Jane "Byrn," his brothers, James and Christopher "Byrn," his four sisters, Ann and Elizabeth "Byrn," Judith Carey and Bridget Dunn, and "Captain Robert McGinnis of New York." In his will Byrne directed his executors "to sell all his real estate," and in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of April 15, 1771, there was an advertisement by his executors, William Bayard and Terence Kerin, attorney at law, announcing for sale "the house and farm of the late Barnaby Byrne near Jamaica, Long Island," and in the same paper of May 13, 1771, they announced that on June 1st "2000 acres of land, situate in the County of Albany, granted to Barnaby Byrne in the year 1765, will be sold at publick vendue at the Merchants' Coffee House."

From information contained in various public records, the advertisements and news columns of contemporary newspapers, genealogical works and other reliable sources, it is possible to identify many of the New York Irish of the eighteenth century, whose names appear in the records of Trinity Parish. So therefore, a slight digression from the mere references to those who were interred in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards may prove of interest, in order to point out their standing in the community.

As far as can be ascertained, the first person of Irish lineage buried in Trinity was of the ancient family of O'Brien, the wife of Edward Hyde, Viscount Cornbury, the English Governor of New York from 1702 to 1708. Two New York historians say her maiden name was Catherine O'Brien, a daughter of Lord O'Brien of Ireland, and that she married Lord Cornbury in the year 1688.[44] Wilson says: "She appears to have been an amiable woman and to have exercised a restraining influence over her dissolute husband. On one of his visits to Albany to attend an Indian council, one of the River Indians presented her with a magnificent otter-skin for a muff, as testimony of his tribe for her personal character, and she seems also to have inspired her dependents with affection." [45] She died in New York on August 11, 1706, and "her obsequies, which were conducted with much pomp and ceremony, took place in Trinity Church." [46]

She was buried within the church and there is an interesting story related of her grave, which for more than a century was practically unknown. One hundred and thirty-three years after her death, when the foundations of the building were being removed for the erection of the present edifice, a grave was opened which contained fragments of a coffin. The large plate which had been placed on the lid was still intact and perfectly legible and showed the name of Lady Cornbury, her age, pedigree and date of her decease, and a new tomb was provided wherein these relics were deposited. Mrs. Jannet Montgomery, widow of the distinguished Irishman, General Richard Montgomery, refers to Lady Cornbury in her unpublished memoirs,[47] and states that she had "the only carriage in the city" in her day!

The oldest stone in Trinity recording the death of a person bearing an Irish name is over the grave of "Ann Lemasny, wife of James Lemasny, who departed this life the 25th. day of August, Anno Domini, 1708." This grave is in the south section of the cemetery on the Rector Street side, near the monument erected to the memory of Alexander Hamilton. The slab is of brown stone, extraordinarily well preserved, considering its age, and the lettering is clearly discernible.

The next in point of age is on the Rector Street side and is also over the grave of a woman, "Sarah McKenny, who died June 20th, 1719, age 74 years." The third oldest stone bearing an Irish name may be seen close up to the railing on the Broadway front, opposite the monument commemorating the soldiers of the Revolution. It has the following inscriptions:

"Here lyes Elizabeth

Six persons named McCarthy and one Carthey were buried in Trinity churchyard. On the Broadway side to the left of the church, there is a stone bearing the following inscription: "Here lyes (ye body of) Mary McC(arthy) died Sept. ye 30th. 1746 in ye 28 year of her age." Of the surname, only the letters "McC" now remain, the right hand upper corner of the stone having been broken off some years ago, but there is a record at the Vestry House, made by a former sexton of the church, which verifies the name as McCarthy.

A Thomas McCarthy was buried in Trinity on September 7, 1750, but no stone now marks his grave. The New York Gazette and Weekly Post-Boy of September 10, 1750, published a report of a "Coroner's Inquest which sat on the body of Thomas McCarty in this City, who died the Tuesday before of some wounds received the 1st of August last in a scuffle with a Boatman, when it was brought in Wilful Murder."

On the north side of the ground in section one, there is a stone with an inscription which informs us that: "Here

MARY MCCARTHY — 1746

Lyes Tim McCarthy who departed this Life June 21st. 1762, Aged 29 years." This Timothy McCarthy was in business with one Armstrong, and there is an advertisement in the New York Mercury of October 24, 1765, whereby the administrators of his estate called upon "all persons indebted to the estate of McCarthy and Armstrong, late of the City of New York, Merchants, either by Bond, Note, or Book Account, to come and settle with the subscribers before the first Day of November next, or otherwise they may expect to be immediately sued."

There was another Timothy McCarthy, who I believe was also buried in Trinity, although there is no record of it, nor is there any stone marking his grave. He was a New York police officer and in 1764 he was killed at Newtown in the performance of his duty,[49] and according to Onderdonk,[50] his body was "taken to New York and decently interred."

A James McCarthy was in business in Bayard Street in 1768, and there is an advertisement by his executors, Alexander Stewart and Daniel McCormick, in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of May 6, 1771, stating that, "all Persons that have any Demands against the Estate of James McCarthey, late of this City, deceased, are desired to send in their accounts." The burial place of James McCarthy is not on record, although it is probable that it was in Trinity or St. Paul's. On that point it can be said with confidence that many of the persons mentioned herein, whose burial places cannot be ascertained because of the destruction of the records, undoubtedly were laid to rest in either of these churchyards.

A stone in Trinity was erected "In Memory of Elizabeth McCarthy who died April 7th., 1795, aged 26 years," and at the Vestry House there are records of the burial of a "Mr. McCarty, aged 50 years," an "inhabitant" of the City of New York, on January 18, 1778, a "child of Mr. McCarty" on June 17, 1783, and "Ann McCarty, aged 15," on September 12, 1806, all in Trinity churchyard.

A remarkably large number of people of this name appears in the records of Trinity Parish. Cornelius McCarthy and Lydea Gallashea were married in Trinity church on August 19, 1750, by Revd. Samuel Auchmuty, the rector, and on December 2, 1750, Dr. Auchmuty united in marriage Thomas McCarty and Sarah Grig. Bryan Carty was married to Eloner Edwards by Revd. Henry Barclay on March 25, 1757; Mary McCartey became the wife of Gilbert Brian on September 11, 1759; the marriage of Peter McCarty and Ann Kean is on record as of March 17, 1762; Catherine McCarty became the wife of Joseph Greenwood on October 11, 1762, and another Catherine McCarty was married to Thomas Burrows on April 11, 1763. Others of the name appearing in Trinity marriage records down to 1789 were, Elizabeth, Mary, Hannah and Margaret McCarthy.

John McCarthy and Mary Donoughie were sponsors at the baptism of William, son of Joseph and Sarah Sholtor on October 3, 1759, and when John, son of John and Catherine McCarty, was baptized on October 28, 1781, William and Catherine Donnevan and Pearce Purcel were the sponsors. All of the marriages and baptisms here mentioned are entered in the records of Trinity Parish, and it should be said also that besides the McCarthys so recorded, there are listed in the Collections of the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society and among the eighteenth century marriage licenses on file at the office of the Secretary of State, the marriages of several people of the name at other New York churches. Daniel McCarthy announced through the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of August 28, 1780, that he "intends for Europe in a few days," and in Rivington's Gazette of December 16, 1780, Dennis McCarthy informed the public that he was about to discontinue business, and both called upon their customers for settlement of their accounts.

For a City where it is generally supposed hardly any others settled but people of Dutch and English blood, this was a fairly large representation of people bearing the ancient Irish name, McCarthy. Indeed, the name is found in New York records at a much earlier period, in the person of "Dennis McKarty," who appears in the "Court Records of New Amsterdam" of October 24, 1671, as the plaintiff in an action for recovery of debt from a "Thomas Edwards M^r^ of the Ketch Society," and he is again recorded in a case entitled "Samuel Hall Plt vs. Denys McKarty Deft" under date of November 14, 1671, when "the Court ordered that a Non-suit should be entered agst the Pl^t^ to pay the Cost." [51] It is evident also that a family of the name was in the City of New York in 1710, as may be seen from a list of marriages solemnized at the Dutch Reformed Church,[52] which includes the marriage of "Dennis Makharty and Elizabeth Reedt," on December 14, 1710, and according to the records of the same church "Geesje Caerthy," the Dutch wife of "Owen Carthey or McCarthey," was one of the sponsors at the christening of "Wilhelmus, daughter of William Murfie and his wife, Annatje Van Ekle," on December 10, 1718.[53]

At the Vestry House there are recorded the burials of persons named O'Brien, O'Donnell, O'Farrell, O'Gillen, O'Hara and O'Neal, and in the eighteenth century baptismal and marriage registers people named O'Byrne, O'Connor, O'Farrell, O'Flagherty, O'Sullivan and O'Harn or O'Hearn are also recorded. All were residents of the City of New York. A "child of Mr. O'Bryan, age 15 months," was buried on May 28, 1777; "Mrs. O'Brien, poor, 40 years of age," on March 13, 1778; a "child of John O'Brien, age 10 months," on October 5, 1779; "Mrs. O'Bryan, age 34," on September 15, 1780; "Mrs. O'Bryan, age 32," on September 30, 1782, and "Mr. O'Bryan, age 46," on March 5, 1783, all in Trinity churchyard.

There were many O'Briens in New York besides those entered in the burial records, and in the marriage registers of Trinity Church at various times throughout the eighteenth century, some of them twenty or more years before the Revolution, there are recorded the marriages of Ann, Eleanor, Honor, Judith, Julia, Margaret and Mary O'Brien, Cornelius, Daniel, David and Terence O'Brien, two Johns and three named Henry O'Brien. When Mary, daughter of John and Sarah "Obrien," was baptized in Trinity Church on June 29, 1783, Martin and Mary Doyle acted as the child's sponsors, and on St. Patrick's Day, 1793, Margaret O'Brien stood sponsor for Ann, daughter of Thomas and Catherine Murphy. Edward "Obrien" was sponsor for Elinor, daughter of Isaac and Mary Hedges, when baptized at St. George's Chapel of Trinity Parish on May 18, 1783, and James "Obrian" is recorded as one of the sponsors at the christening of James, son of Francis and Isabel Block, on November 16, 1794. And the records of one other New York church, O'Brien (New York, 1921), for references to many other people of the name who were residents of New York in the eighteenth century.

the First Presbyterian, between the years 1759 and 1793, contain entries of the marriages of Elizabeth, John and Thomas O'Brian, Elizabeth and James O'Bryan and Margaret O'Brien.

Several people of the name appear in the land records [54] of the eighteenth century, and are mentioned among the enterprising citizens of New York in their day. Through the Mercury of March 16, 1752, Daniel O'Brien made his first announcement of the operation of his ferry or "stage-boat" between "the White-Hall Slip near the Half Moon Battery" and Perth Amboy, N. J., and on July 8, 1754, he announced in a long advertisement that he "was now provided with two good boats exceeding well-fitted with every accommodation for passengers, ready to transport them to Bordentown, Burlington and Philadelphia." He continued this advertisement in the papers for nearly six years and in 1758 the ferry was operated by Captains James McGee, Patrick Hanlon, James Carson, Ralph Smith and Daniel Harrison.[55]

There is no scarcity of the O'Brien name in New York records, besides those of Trinity Parish. Among those who appear in the records of the office of the Surrogate for New York County, we find: "Henry O'Bryan of New York, innkeeper," sole legatee under the will of "Peter Power of New York, mariner," dated October 5, 1748;[56] John O'Brian, executor of the will of Michael Woods, dated March 2, 1761;[57] Thomas O'Brian, executor of the will of David Vaughan, dated April 8, 1761;[58] Lewis O'Brien was appointed joint executor with John Cornell and Jeffry Keating of the will of "John Barry of New York, mariner," dated November 27, 1781,[59] and "Patrick O'Brien of the City of New York, Gentleman," and Carlisle Pollock were appointed executors of the will of James Buchanan, dated February 1, 1786.[60]

In New York colonial records there are references to the romantic marriage in the year 1764, of an Irish actor named William O'Brien and Lady Susanna Fox, daughter of the Earl of Ilchester. The bride's parents disapproved of her choice, but, through his influence with the government, Lord Ilchester secured a grant of land to be located in the Mohawk River valley, which he intended for the benefit of his daughter and son-in-law. They came to New York in 1764, but O'Brien was prevented from locating on the Mohawk River lands, because of the opposition of Lieutenant-Governor Colden. He was employed in the Customs service, meanwhile carrying on a long controversy with the colonial officials about the location of the land grant [61] but without success, and it is apparent the O'Briens left the City in 1769, since the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of September 18th in that year said that "William O'Brien, Esq. and his Lady" had "set out for Quebeck." And in the same issue of the paper, "Moore, Lynsen and Company, Auctioneers," announced that there was "to be sold at Publick Auction on the 26th inst. at the house of William O'Brien, Esq., in the Broad Way opposite Trinity Church, all that Gentleman's neat, elegant and genuine Household Furniture, made by the first workmen in London, consisting of mahogany chairs, tables, cabinets, commodes, desks, chests upon chests, bedsteads, Dresden china, glasses, covered sleigh with harness for two horses, with a great variety of necessary Household and Kitchen Furniture."

"Henry O'Brien, Stay-maker from Dublin," advertised his shop "near the Flatten Barrack in the Broad Way" in the New York Journal or General Advertiser of March 23, 1775; Andrew O'Brien announced through the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of February 13, 1779, that he had for sale "a new built house in Water Street, opposite Dover Street"; William O'Brien of 66 Water Street offered a reward for the apprehension of a runaway negro servant, through Rivington's Gazette of September 26, 1782, and Clossey and O'Brien of 112 Maiden Lane announced through the Herald on January 7, 1797, that they had for sale "glass ware of the best kind, just imported in the ship Orange, Captain Walsh, from Dublin."

A "child of Richard O'Ferral, an inhabitant," was buried on June 2, 1777; a "child of Mr. O'Donnell," also "an inhabitant," on December 29, 1777, and "Mrs. O'Donnall, a stranger," on January 28, 1778, all in Trinity churchyard. No other reference to O'Ferral can be found in the records, although there is an entry of the marriage of "Richard O'Farrell and Anna Stephens" in the records of the First Presbyterian Church under date of December 18, 1776. And the only O'Donnell mentioned as a resident of New York about this period was "James O'Donnell, Taylor from London, opposite the Merchant's Coffee House," who so advertised his business in the newspapers. In his first advertisement in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of May 19, 1774, James O'Donnell announced that he "intends carrying on his profession in all its branches in this City. He hopes his faithful execution, expedition and neat performance will be a recommendation to those Gentlemen and Ladies who are pleased to honour him with their commands and as he has experienced in the most fashionable Cities in England and Ireland, and doubts not but his superior abilities in his profession will make a clear demonstration."

"Mrs. O'Neal, aged 29," and "Elizabeth O'Neal, aged 45," were buried in Trinity on September 8, 1783, and September 5, 1801, respectively. And there is a stone in Trinity bearing an inscription, stating that "Eleanor, wife of Patrick O'Hare, died March 27th., 1815, aged 21 years—also Ellen, her daughter, died 1813, aged 2 years."

Murphy is one of the most frequently recurring among Irish names in American records, and in the marriage registers of Trinity Church alone there are entries of the marriages of Ellen, Elizabeth, Rachel, John, Mark and Michael Murphy, two James Murphys, three Eleanors and two Marys, and three named Patrick Murphy, between the years 1754 and 1792. Five other Murphys were married at the Presbyterian Church between 1763 and 1797. There are two Murphy plots in the churchyard. One stone has a double inscription stating that "Thomas, son of Thomas and Abigail Murphy, died Aug. 25th. 1799," and "Thomas Murphy, died March 15th. 1801." John Murphy erected a stone over the grave of "his brother James, who died July 25th. 1820, aged 28 years."

The burials in Trinity of six children of "Mr. Murphy," sometimes described as "a stranger" in New York, appear in the Registry of the years 1780, 1781 and 1783; "Mr. Murphy, age 25 years," was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on August 9, 1780; there is another entry of a "Mr. Murphy, age 28 years," who was buried in Trinity on December 14, 1783; a third entry covers the burial of "Mr. Murphy, age 80 years," in St. Paul's on February 10, 1801, and a fourth entry of the burial in Trinity on March 16, 1801, of "Mr. Murphy, age 48 years." The Register also records the burial of Caroline Murphy, age 10," in St. Paul's on May 11, 1817, and the burial in Trinity on July 31, 1818, of "James Murphy, age 27." In none of these twelve cases can the graves be located, since all are unmarked by stones, and in only two cases can they be identified, viz. those buried on December 14, 1783, and February 10, 1801. The first mentioned was "Peter Murphy of the City of New York, mariner," whose will dated November 9, 1783, is so recorded at the Surrogate's office,[62] and the second was Mark Murphy, who advertised as a "chocolate manufacturer and importer of wines at 57 Maiden Lane," and whose will was recorded as of July 2, 1790.

More than 200 years ago people of the name are found in New York records. William Murphy and Hanna Van Ekele appear in the marriage register of the Dutch Reformed Church of July 11, 1713, under the caption, "Personen met Licentie," i.e., persons who received licenses to marry, and the christening of their first child, "Wilhelmus, daughter of William Murfie and his wife, Annatje Van Ekele," was recorded on December 10, 1718. At the Register's office there is a record under date of May 14, 1726, of a deed of indentures from Hester Crudge to James Murphy,[63] and from that year down to the end of the century there are recorded several transactions in New York real estate, in which people named Murphy were the grantors or grantees.[64] And in the Surrogate's records [65] there are entries covering wills, letters of administration, executors, legatees, etc., all indicating that the name was not scarce among eighteenth century residents of the City of New York.

Nicholas "Murfey" was on the roll of Captain Cornelius Van Horne's military company, recruited in New York in 1737, and among his fellow soldiers are noted John Kelley, Patrick Smith, John McMullen, John "Swilivan," as well as men named Linch, Hayse, Welsh, Hanley, Maguire and "Sheredewyn." I rather suspect the latter name was meant for Sheridan, and in one case at least, viz. the marriage of Patrick Fox and "Magdalene Sheredewyn," we know that the bride's name was Sheridan. Nicholas Murphy was made a Freeman of the City by the Common Council in 1739; the wills of Roger and Arthur Murphy dated November 22, 1758, and January 25, 1762, respectively, are recorded in the Surrogate's Court; Alexander and Michael Murphy appear on a "Poll list on Election for Assembly, February, 1761"; Philip Murphy announced through Rivington's Gazette on July 7, 1779, the dissolution of "the copartnership of Matthews & Murphy" but that he would carry on the business; in the same paper of October 16, 1779, Hosmer and Murphy advertised a cargo of provisions of various kinds "just imported from Dublin in the Brig, Duchess of Leinster, Roger Scallon, Master," for sale "at their store no. 6 Cherry Street," and William Murphy advertised his business in the local papers in the year 1782. These, probably, were the Murphys who were buried in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards, but who cannot now be identified because of the manner in which the entries were made.

An Irishman named John Keating who deserves a place in any history of the City of New York, is recorded as having been buried in Trinity churchyard on December 5, 1783. He is first heard of in 1766, through his advertisement in the Mercury on June 16th of that year, of a large assortment of imported goods for sale "at his store in the Fly Market," then situated on the south side of Maiden Lane between Queen and Water Streets. And in the same paper of August 15, 1768, he announced the establishment of his "New York Paper Manufactory, between the Fly Market and Burling's Slip." This John Keating was a true patriot and an enterprising business man, and it is evident from his advertisements that he was an enthusiastic advocate of establishing in America the Irish economic policy of Sinn Fein (which means ourselves alone).

Through an advertisement in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury on February 13, 1767, John Keating called on "all persons who have the Welfare of their Country at Heart to seriously consider the importance of a Paper Manufactory to this Government," for by this means he said, "we would keep in the Province the Sums of Money we are usually remitting for this single Commodity." In the New York Journal or General Advertiser of May 28, 1772, he told of the different kinds of paper he manufactured, adding: "When it is considered that the above paper and other articles manufactured here make a clear saving to this country of all the money that would have to be sent out to purchase them from abroad, it is hoped that all those who really wish to promote the interest of America, and of this country in particular with which their own interest is so closely connected, will contribute their aid to the success of this undertaking."

His advertisement in the Advertiser on January 12, 1775, was a lecture on practical patriotism. He referred to "the present alarming situation in the Colonies, which renders it entirely needless to point out the utility of establishing this and every other kind of manufactory among us as soon as possible, this being the safest and most efficacious method of convincing the Ministry of Great Britain of their errour and of securing opulence for ourselves." Anxious to get this idea before the public, he published this or similar advertisements in the newspapers on numerous occasions, and in some of them Keating declared that he was the first to introduce the manufacture of paper in New York. However, when the British army entered the City in September, 1776, he was one of those who were compelled to leave and between 1778 and 1782 we find him at Dover and Rhinebeck, Dutchess County, where he operated general stores.[66] In the very month that he left New York his paper manufactory was destroyed by fire. He died soon after his return to the City in November, 1783, and was buried in Trinity churchyard.

There was another enterprising citizen of New York named John Keating, who informed the public through an advertisement in the Packet of January 1, 1784, that "he has erected his Flax-Seed Works on the wharff below the Coffee House, where Flax-Seed is cleared in the best manner on the lowest terms," and he "guaranteed" that "orders from abroad will be thankfully received and executed with the strictest punctuality and greatest despatch." Two of his children were baptized in Trinity Church on March 17, 1789, and the sponsors on record are Ann, William and Richard F. Keating.

There is a stone over the grave of "Margaret Carroll, daughter of Thomas and Mary Carroll, who died March 12th., 1798," and while there is no record of the burial of the parents, it is probable that they also were buried in Trinity churchyard. Thomas Carroll came to this country from Ireland sometime about the middle of the eighteenth century, and for a number of years he conducted one of the principal private schools in New York, which was patronized by some of the leading families in the City. In the columns of the Mercury on May 12, 1766, he announced that he had "removed his Mathematical School from Broad Street to Wall Street," and on October 19, 1767, he advertised in the same paper that "for the Conveniency of a genteel School-Room" he had "removed from Wall Street to Maiden Lane." In an announcement of his death in the New York Journal and Weekly Register of December 3, 1789, he was referred to as "an eminent teacher of the mathematics, who resided in this City for some years previous to the late war," and we are told "his activities in his profession were superior," and he was "endowed with many valuable qualifications which endeared him to his friends and acquaintances." He is described as "a tall and stately man," "fastidious in dress" and "of suave and courtly manners." As guide and mentor of New York youth, he seems to have been a man of rare accomplishments for the time; his activities as a teacher covered a period of a quarter of a century, after which he retired to private life. He was an honor to the country of his birth and a valuable acquisition to the country of his adoption. His son, George Carroll, and John Patterson were the publishers of the New York Evening Post in 1786.

One of the most interesting landmarks in the City of New York, Washington's Headquarters at 160th Street and Edgecombe Avenue, sometimes called the Jumel Mansion, was erected on lands once owned by James Carroll.[67] Originally, these lands were part of a grant to one Jan Kiersen, whose son, Abraham, conveyed them for a consideration of £1000, to James Carroll, by deed dated January 29, 1763,[68]

[67] Harlem, Its Origin and Early Annals, by James Riker, pp. 333 and 514; N. Y., 1881.

[68] Records of Deeds and Conveyances; Lib. 37, p. 4.

and from Carroll the property later passed to Colonel Roger Morris, who erected the "Mansion" in the year 1765. There are records of the burial in Trinity churchyard of children of James Carroll and of his son, James, in 1777 and 1783. The elder Carroll was a market gardener from whose farm in the old village of Harlem, near what is now the northern end of Central Park, some of the well-to-do New York families were supplied for many years. There is evidence also that Carroll was interested in the local politics of his day. With other citizens of New York, he signed a petition for the removal of the sheriff, William Cosby, in the year 1737; his name appears in a list of voters in an election held in February, 1761, for members of the General Assembly, and the "Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council of the City of New York" show that on September 29, 1764, he was appointed "Constable of the Harlem Division." He died intestate and on April 25, 1769, the Surrogate granted letters of administration to his wife, Mary Carroll. His son, James Carroll, was a provision merchant in Nassau Street, and in a deed dated April 28, 1759, covering the purchase of two houses and lots on that street, he is described as "of the City of New York, butcher." [69]

One of the name who, according to a tradition of the old Mott family of New York, was buried in Trinity churchyard, was Patrick Carroll. He died in 1770, but, since the burial register of that year was destroyed, the tradition cannot be verified by official records. He advertised frequently in the papers as "an apothecary at the sign of the Unicorn and Mortar in Hanover Square," and according to the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of September 10, 1770, he was in business there "for nearly thirty years." His name is nearly always spelled in the records, "Patrick Carryl," and it was so recorded at St. George's Church, Hempstead, on his marriage to Mariana Mott on July 23, 1730. That his proper name was Carroll is apparent from the genealogy of the Mott family, and in the will of "Charles Mott of Cow Neck, in Hempstead, Long Island," dated February 10, 1740, the daughter of the testator was referred to as "Mary Anne Carroll, wife of Patrick Carroll."

Anthony Carroll, who was buried in Trinity churchyard on October 16, 1804, was one of the most interesting individuals of the name in New York. He was born in Ireland in 1768, one of four sons of Denis Carroll of County Tipperary, and the genealogical data in the possession of his great-grandson, Mr. Bradish J. Carroll of New York, show that he sprang from the same branch of the O'Carroll family which gave to America Charles Carroll, Secretary to Lord Baltimore and Attorney-General of the Province of Maryland, and grandfather of the distinguished Signer of the Declaration of Independence, Charles Carroll of Carrolton. When twenty years old, Anthony Carroll was sent to a military school in France and later served as a sous officier in Marie Antoinette's guard. In 1794 he came to New York and was employed by the firm of Gouverneur and Kemble, reputed to have been the largest importing house in the United States. That he must have been a youth of uncommon attainments for the time, is evident from his marriage alliance with the Ludlow family, which for more than a century was one of the wealthiest and most influential in the City of New York, and three years after his arrival here he was engaged in business for himself. His advertisements in the local newspapers show that his place of business was "on Gouverneur's Wharf".

The records and mementos of the Carroll and Ludlow families, in the possession of Bradish J. Carroll, are a remarkable collection and have been handed down in these families for several generations. They show that Denis, brother of Anthony Carroll, was a merchant in Dublin, and from the extensive correspondence carried on between the brothers we learn that from 1795 to 1798 Denis was the Irish representative of several American importing houses and was regularly engaged in the shipment of linens, calicoes and other Irish products to his brother Anthony, and the latter exported to Ireland American manufactured goods, skins, flaxseed, turpentine and oil. That he was a very successful business man appears from the administration papers of his estate and the fact that he was a large shareholder in the Merchant's Bank, the second banking institution in New York (1803).

As of April 23, 1796, there is a record of the marriage at Trinity Church of Anthony Carroll and Grace, daughter of Gabriel Ludlow, whose immigrant ancestor, Gabriel Ludlow, settled in New York in the year 1694. Ann, sister of Grace Ludlow, married the famous Brockholst Livingston, (son of Governor William Livingston of New Jersey), who in 1802 became a Judge of the New York Supreme Court and four years later an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Anthony and Grace (Ludlow) Carroll had five children, one of whom, Emily, was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on September 7, 1803, and Grace Carroll was buried in Trinity on May 15, 1816. Anthony Carroll (2nd), a New York lawyer, son of Anthony and Grace Carroll, married Frances Ann Ludlow, and their son Alfred Ludlow Carroll, was one of the leading physicians in New York in his day. He was also noted as an artist and magazine writer and many of his literary productions appeared in Harper's Magazine seventy or more years ago.

On the Broadway side of the burial ground, directly inside the railing, there is a row of four small stones half sunken in the earth, bearing the names of "John Welch," his "wife, Dinah," and five of their children, the earliest date being 1739 and the latest 1752. That his name was Walsh is indicated by the "Marriage Bonds" on file at the office of the Secretary of State, showing that "John Walsh and Diana Walsh" were married in New York on December 30, 1737.[69a] In other parts of the cemetery there are stones erected to the memories of William Welch who died in 1703, to James Welsh and his wife, Hannah, and to another James Welch who died in 1725. The burial registry also shows that "Edmund Welch, age 44 years," was buried in Trinity on February 15, 1779, and "William Walsh, age 50 years," an "inhabitant" of New York, on March 7, 1780. There is also a stone in Trinity churchyard bearing the simple inscription, "John Walsh," without date or other particulars. "Harriet Walsh, age 46," was buried in Trinity on June 7, 1818.

There are fifteen entries in Trinity Parish records of the eighteenth century of marriages of people named "Welsh" or "Welch." These were the forms by which the surname, Walsh, frequently was entered in the colonial records, and doubtless this came about through the fact that in Ireland the name is so pronounced; so, it is probable that the Welsh's and Welch's who were buried in Trinity were of Irish origin. As early as 1674 we find one of the name in New York in the person of William Walsh, who in that year was recorded among the "Owners of Houses and Lots," and William Walsh is included in a "list of Inhabitants of the City of New York" in 1703.[70] Patrick Walsh was made "High Constable of the City and County of New York" on September 30, 1771,[71] and his reappointment to that post each year down to 1775 is recorded in the Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council. His name appears in these records as many as forty-one times down to the year 1776. In the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of May 30, 1774, Hunter and Walsh in a long advertisement announced that "they have erected and are now carrying on a Soap and Candle Manufactory in Broad Street, a few doors above the Post Office." Hugh Walsh, the junior member of the firm, was one of the refugees who left New York in 1776, and on his return he advertised in the Packet of January 1, 1784, that "he has returned to this City, no. 46 Broad Street, the place he occupied before the War, where he intends carrying on the Soap Boiling and Tallow Chandling Business extensively," and according to the same paper of January 5, 1784, he was elected "Alderman for the East Ward." He was a member of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and in 1786 he was treasurer of the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen.

James Walsh advertised in the Mercury of July 6, 1767, "Madeira Wine for sale at the Merchants' Coffee House." "Edward Walsh in George Street" advertised his business in the same paper on November 11, 1776. Gilmour and Walsh advertised on October 5, 1778, a varied assortment of dry goods and wearing apparel for sale at their store, 843 Hanover Square, and John Walsh of Barrack Street was an advertiser in the same year. Thomas Walsh advertised his store "at no. 11 Fly Market" in the Packet of March 9, 1787, and in a record of "Pew Holders" at Trinity Church there is entered the name of Thomas Walsh, as paying the rent of his pew between the years 1811 and 1819. There was a firm known as Dudley, Walsh & Co. at 15 Wall Street in 1781.

Reilly is another name that is frequently misspelled in early American records, the forms mostly used being "Riley" and "Ryley," and these also occur in the records of Trinity parish. Apparently, it all depended on the officiating clergyman's personal idea as to how to spell the name, and instances are noted where the spelling is "Reilly" in the marriage records, while another minister would later record the same person "Riley" or "Ryley" in the baptismal record, or vice versa. Among burials in Trinity churchyard, two children of "Mr. Riley" are recorded in 1779 and 1780; "Mrs. Ryley, age 38," on August 11, 1781; "Catharine Riley, age 65," on February 1, 1801, and "Catherine Riley, age 78," on April 20, 1803. "Mrs. Ryley, age 21," and "Mr. Riley, age 40," were buried in St. Paul's on September 18, 1804, and April 8, 1805, respectively.

The eighteenth century marriage records of Trinity church that were saved from destruction contain entries of the marriages of John Reilly, James, Mary and Thomas Riley, and Edmund and James Ryley, and the baptismal records show that children of Edward, James, Matthew, Patrick and Terence Reilly were baptized in that church. When James, son of Patrick and Cathleen Meagher, was baptized in Trinity Church on December 13, 1778, "Mrs" Reiley and Michael Fitzgerald were the sponsors, and at the baptism of Hannah, daughter of Patrick and Elizabeth Reilly, on July 16, 1780, Nicholas Doyle was one of the sponsors. Eleanor Riley and Levena Hickey acted as sponsors for Nelly, daughter of James and Elizabeth Conway, in Trinity on April 26, 1783, and Peter Riley was one of the sponsors at the christening of a child of T. and Alice Quin on July 28, 1793.

As in the several instances cited, all of these people cannot be identified among the many Reillys whose names turn up in New York's early records. There are three men named Terence Reilly on record; one in business in Dock Street in 1780, one was a member of the firm of Reilly and Perry, auctioneers, with a store in Broad Street, and a third Terence Reilly advertised as a schoolmaster, and while there is no certainty that he taught school in New York, the records of the Surrogate's office indicate that he was a schoolmaster in Staten Island in the year 1772.[72]

On the north side of the burial ground, under the shadow of the towering Trinity Building, there are eight graves near one another wherein were interred the bodies of people named Bourke, Doyle, Fitzpatrick, McDonnell, McDonough and Ryan, as well as "James Major, a native of Londonderry, Ireland" (without date), and "John Johnson from Armagh, Ireland, who died August 18, 1790."

The inscription on the Bourke headstone says that "John Bourke died April 3d. 1768 aged 33 years." Bourke was a "waggon and coach builder" and the advertisements of his business, "at the sign of the Turk's Head in Oswego Street," may be seen in the New York papers of 1766 and 1767. At least five people of this name appear in the parish records as having been buried in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards. A "Miss Ann Burke, age 70," appears in the burial register of April 25, 1781, and an announcement of her death in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of May 7, 1781, described her as "an ancient inhabitant of this City, a lady that was possessed of every amiable qualification and died regretted by all her acquaintances." A "Mrs. Burke, age

[72] "Terence Reilly, Schoolmaster," and "James Duffie, Schoolmaster," signed as witnesses to the will of "John Watts of Staten Island, Shopkeeper," on January 30, 1772. Will proved before the Surrogate of Richmond County on April 13, 1772 (Surrogate's records, Lib. 28, p. 243).

38," and a "Mr. Burke, age 27 years," were buried in St. Paul's churchyard on March 9, 1783, and February 11, 1804, respectively.

Between 1757 and 1796 there are entries in the parish records of the marriages of three Mary Burkes, and of Martha, Andrew, James, John and William Burke. Francis Burke, attorney at law, had an advertisement on behalf of a client in the Mercury of June 6, 1767, and an advertisement in the same paper of July 30th, 1781, by Banan and Burke, New York importers, listed for sale provisions "just arrived in the Mary and Margaret and the Thomas from Corke." Banan and Burke again advertised in the Mercury of June 2, 1783, saying "they are just arrived from Cork in the Henry of Whitehaven," and they enumerated various imported articles "for sale aboard said vessel."

The inscription on the Doyle headstone says that "Sarah Doyle, wife of Dennis Doyle, died Feby. 5th, 1806." There were two citizens of New York at this time named Dennis Doyle, one of whom was a son of Darby Doyle, who lived in Partition (now Fulton) Street, and who operated a ferry from the foot of Whitehall Street to Stapleton, Staten Island between 1769 and 1775.[73] When the British army occupied Staten Island, Darby Doyle's ferry house and tavern were destroyed, and in 1784 a man of the name resided at Hempstead, Long Island. There is no entry in Trinity Parish records of the burial of Darby Doyle, but the burial of his wife in St. Paul's churchyard was recorded as of September 17, 1781. The other Dennis Doyle was an architect and it was he who drew the plans for the first St. Patrick's Cathedral in Mott Street in 1809. He was one of the trustees of St. Peter's Catholic Church from 1785 to [73] See interesting announcement of the opening of Doyle's ferry in New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of June 5, 1769.

1811. He is shown on Goerck's "Map of the New York Common Lands as surveyed and laid out into Lots in the year 1796," on file at the Register's office, as the owner of the entire block from Fourth to Fifth Avenues and 50th to 51st Streets, and one of the title deeds to the property on which St. Patrick's Cathedral stands was a deed from Andrew Morris and wife and Cornelius Heeney to Dennis Doyle. This Andrew Morris was a native of Ireland and is noted as the first Catholic Alderman in the City of New York.

Francis Doyle of 63 Chatham Street advertised in Rivington's Gazette on February 9, 1780; Patrick Doyle & Elizabeth Power announced through the Mercury of March 22, 1779, the establishment of their restaurant "at the elegant house in Smith Street where Joseph Haynes formerly lived," and Martin Doyle announced through Rivington's Gazette of November 24, 1779, to "his friends, the public," that he had opened a "Purl House at the sign of the Faithful Irishman & Jolly Sailors in King St. next door to the Queen's Head Tavern, where may be had, at any minute in the morning, if you please, a glass of excellent Purl, piping hot." King was also known as "Irish Street," and on October 4, 1780, Martin Doyle advertised his "Purl House in Irish Street next door to the Queen's Head Tavern."

The number of people of the name who were buried in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards indicates the presence of several different Doyle families in New York in the eighteenth century. Among burials in Trinity entered in the parish record, we find: "A child of Col. Doyle" on July 10, 1779; "Mr. Doyle, age 28 years," on March 29, 1780, and "Patrick Doyle, age 54 years," the innkeeper in Smith Street, on September 10, 1780. Apparently the latter was a native of Tyrone, since by his will dated September 8, 1780, he named his "honored father, Lawrence Doyle of the County Tyrone, Ireland," his sole legatee.[74] "Mrs. Doil, age 33," on June 23, 1782, and "Mr. Doyle, age 22," on April 4, 1801, are recorded among the burials in Trinity, and a "Mr. Doyle, age 37," was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on February 3, 1801. There are no headstones over the graves of these seven persons, but there is a stone in St. Paul's with an inscription stating that: "Here Lieth Edmund Lewis Doyle, son of Thomas Doyle of the City of New York, who died the 25th. day of July, 1797, aged 9 months."

The Fitzpatrick stone is one of the very few in Trinity churchyard with part of the inscription in Latin. The left and right hand upper corners are broken off, but part of the top line is clearly discernible: "—O Mori Quam Villga—" followed by: "Stephen Fitzpatrick departed this life Jan. 28th. 1760, Aged 27 years." Stephen Fitzpatrick appears in the parish records under date of July 8, 1759, when he stood sponsor at the christening of David, son of David and Elinor (Doyle) Fitzsimmons. And among a number of legal documents on file at the State Library there are four powers of attorney executed by sea-captains in favor of Stephen Fitzpatrick, although there is nothing to indicate if this were the same man who was buried in Trinity.

[74] Surrogate's records, Lib. 32, p. 324.

The McDonough stone bears an inscription stating that "John, son of John and Hannah McDonough, died December 21, 1819." John McDonough, the father, was a second cousin of Commodore Thomas Macdonough of the United States Navy, who distinguished himself at the battle of Lake Champlain in the War of 1812. About the year 1730 James McDonough, grandfather of the Commodore, with his brothers, John and Augustine, left their home in County Kildare, Ireland,[75] and came to New York. James settled permanently in Newcastle County, Delaware, Augustine went to the West Indies and John settled in Newtown, Long Island, now in the City of New York. Two sons of James McDonough, Thomas, father of the Commodore, and John, entered the Revolutionary army; Thomas became Adjutant of the regiment commanded by Colonel John Haslet [76] and distinguished himself by leading his battalion at the disastrous battle of Long Island, August 27, 1776. John McDonough, the immigrant, married Elizabeth Lawrence at Newtown on August 7, 1735,[77] and sometime prior to 1753 he located at Hallett's Cove on the East River, opposite to what is now 96th. Street, Manhattan, and in that year he married Hannah, daughter of Samuel Hallett, a man who in his day was "a person of consideration." [78]

John, son of John and Elizabeth McDonough, married Rebekah Jackson at Newtown on June 30, 1770; his name appears in a "Poll List of the Freeholders of the Town of [75] Life of Commodore Thomas Macdonough, by Rodney Macdonough; Boston, Mass., 1909. The Delaware branch of the family spell the name, "Macdonough," but the New York branch continued the form of the name used by the immigrant brothers who came over about 1730.

Newtown" in the year 1775,[79] and he is listed by Riker [80] among the Revolutionary patriots of Long Island in the year 1776. Their son, John, was the father of the John McDonough who was buried in Trinity churchyard on December 22, 1819. Riker also mentions a James McDonough who married Hannah Leverick at Newtown, and the records of Trinity Parish show that Mary and Eleanor, daughters of Patrick and Cathleen McDonough of New York, were baptized in Trinity Church on May 30, 1779, and September 10, 1780, respectively.

The inscription on the McDonnell stone reads: "In Memory of John McDonnell who died Feby 2d. 1798, Aged 28 Y 9 M." There is also a stone in St. Paul's churchyard to the memory of "Frances Mary, daughter of William and Jane McDonell, who died June 11, 1816."

The Ryan headstone says it was erected "In Memory of James Ryan, a Native of Ireland, who departed this life 6th. of Feby 1796, aged 48 years—also 7 children of James & Sarah Ryan are interred here"—followed by the couplet:

"The hour of death draws nigh
'Tis time to drop the mask."

A James Ryan, probably the man above mentioned, advertised from "no. 7 Cooper Street" in 1781. A "child of John Ryan," an "inhabitant" of New York, was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on January 6, 1778, and "Mrs. Ryan, age 56," on May 5, 1806. Among burials in Trinity, but whose graves have no headstones, there are recorded: "James Royan, age 73, an inhabitant," on May 20, 1778; "Thomas Ryan, age 30, a stranger," on October 4, 1778; "Mrs. Ryan, age 40," on January 19, 1781, and "Mrs. Ryan, age 28," on February 6, 1782. The John Ryan above referred to was made a Freeman of the City of New York in 1741, and there is a record of a deed dated November 29, 1751, by which Oliver DeLancey conveyed to John Ryan "a certain Messuage and Tenement Lot of Ground and premises situate in Pearl Street," and by another deed dated December 31, 1800, "Mary English and Catherine Ryan, surviving children and heirs-at-law of John Ryan, deceased," conveyed the property to Oliver Kane for a consideration of $3000. Cornelius Ryan was a New York merchant as early as 1758 and the marriage registers of the Presbyterian Church show that he was married to Catherine Cartey on February 28, 1760. On December 8, 1766, he advertised large quantities of leather goods, "wholesale and retail," for sale at his store "opposite the Coffee House," and in 1775 he advertised his business "in the Broad Way near the Oswego Market." In Trinity Parish records there are eleven entries of marriages of people named Ryan between 1754 and 1796 and seven other Ryans were married at the Presbyterian Church.

In St. Paul's churchyard there is a stone bearing an inscription: "Here Lyes the Body of Daniel Sullivan who departed this Life the 18——" The remainder of the inscription cannot be deciphered, but since the entry covering probate of the will of "Daniel Sullivan of New York, innkeeper," shows that he died in New York on October 18, 1772,[81] there can be little doubt that this was the man who was buried in St. Paul's. He kept a tavern known as "The Bunch of Grapes" at what is now the site of the old Times Building on Park Row. It was there the Sons of Liberty sometimes held their meetings during the pre-Revolutionary agitation in New York, and it was at "The Bunch of [81] Records of the Surrogate's Court, Lib. 28, p. 320.

Grapes," then conducted by John Sullivan, that a famous meeting was held on March 6, 1775, whence the patriots of the City marched to Wall Street and blocked the attempt of the Tory element to elect City officials from their own ranks. Daniel and Dennis Sullivan and John Sullivan appear in a "Poll List on Election for Assembly, February, 1761." [82] which was something of a distinction since there were, all told, only 1447 voters on the roll. In the New York Journal or General Advertiser of November 12, 1772, Anthony Lispenard and George Shaw, "executors of the estate of the late Daniel Sullivan," called upon "his debtors to make immediate payment," and "those who have any demands are called upon to bring in their accounts promptly." At the Register's office in the Hall of Records [83] there are on file six powers of attorney [84] to Daniel Sullivan authorizing him to act in the interests of certain mariners while at sea.

From Hugh Neil to Daniel Sullivan, dated December 8, 1750.

From Mathias Luce to Daniel Sullivan, dated July 18, 1757

From Barney Mayley to Daniel Sullivan, dated July 18, 1757.

From Lawrence Power to Daniel Sullivan, dated December 17, 1757.

[82] See Wilson's Memorial History of New York, Vol. I, for a complete list of the voters.

[83] Lib. 35.

[84] A number of other mariners in the service of the colonial navy, some of whom are described as "from Ireland," appear in the records at the office of the Register for the City and County of New York. It was the custom for sailors before departing on a cruise, to execute powers of attorney, authorizing their representatives to receive for them their share of prospective prize money. In one of these instruments dated March 16, 1746, John and Philip Daly, "Patt" Hallygan, William Foy, John McDonald, John McKenny, Timothy Maddin, Cornelius Power and Thomas Sullivan named Michael Beezley of New York, their attorney. (Lib. 33, p. 168, Register's office.)

From Owen Sullivan to Daniel Sullivan, dated August 24, 1758.

From Edward Dealy to Daniel Sullivan, dated March 1, 1759.

At the Surrogate's office there is recorded the will of Cornelius Gafney, dated August 31, 1758, the witnesses to which were Dennis and "Jerry" Sullivan. Doubtless, the latter was the "Jeremiah Sullivan, age 60, an inhabitant," who so appears in the burial register as having been buried in Trinity churchyard on September 2, 1777. The marriage of Jeremiah Sullivan and Mary Hancock by Revd. Henry Barclay, Rector of Trinity, is recorded under date of September 23, 1758, and on August 29, 1759, when their first child, Jeremiah, was baptized, Lawrence Sweeney was one of the sponsors.

Two children of "Mr. Sullivan" were buried in Trinity churchyard in 1778 and 1783, and two children of "Mr. Sullivan" were buried in St. Paul's in 1802 and 1804. The name turns up very frequently in New York public records. Its first appearance in the parish registers was in 1748, in an entry covering the marriage of Elinor Sullivan and William Robinson on December 17th in that year, and between 1751 and 1793 people named Dennis, Hendrick, John, Morris, Owen and Timothy Sullivan, three Mary Sullivans and Mary O'Sullivan were married in Trinity Church. In the baptismal registers we find Jeremiah Sullivan and Judith Dooling acting as sponsors at the christening of Richard, son of Samuel and Abigail Spilsbury, on October 11, 1778; John Sullivan and Catherine Tobin were sponsors for Ann, daughter of Jonathan and Ann Clark, on August 19, 1781; Benjamin and Catherine Sullivan had a son, Benjamin, baptized in Trinity on March 9, 1794, and under date of December 28, 1821, the register records the burial in St. Paul's churchyard of "Benjamin Sullivan, age 27." On August 26, 1796, James and Rachel Sullivan had a daughter Letty, baptized in Trinity, and there is an entry of the burial of Rachel Sullivan in St. Paul's churchyard on December 19, 1816.

Charles Sullivan was made a "Freeman" of the City on December 21, 1752, and in 1753 he advertised his "Tavern at the Fresh Water in the Out Ward of the City." There was also a Florence Sullivan in business in New York, as may be seen from his advertisements in the papers on October 9, 1780, of the sale of "a cargo of fish just arrived from Halifax," and one Luke Sullivan, a City employee, is mentioned in the Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council of the year 1785. At the Register's office [84a] there are recorded several deeds and other legal instruments in which people of the name were interested parties:

Several of the name appear in the records of the Surrogate's Court at various times in the eighteenth century, among them Ann, Bridget, Dennis, Jeremiah, Jonathan, John, Mary, Maurice and Nancy Sullivan. Ann was the widow of the Daniel Sullivan before referred to, who was buried in St. Paul's churchyard in 1772, but there is no record of the place where she was interred. In her will dated May 20, 1789, she named among the legatees her "nephew, George Adams of the City of Cork, Ireland." In the will of "Maurice Sullivan of New York, Mariner," dated December 20, 1752, he named his wife, Mary, sole legatee and executrix, and Martin Farrell signed the attestation clause, and in the will of "Gibbon Bourke of New York, Merchant," dated March 2, 1788, John Sullivan was made executor.

The Lawrence Sweeney before mentioned, who stood sponsor at the christening of Jeremiah Sullivan at Trinity Church on August 29, 1759, was a noted "character" of his day in New York. He was known as "The Penny Post Boy" because of his charge for delivering mail. He was also New York's first newsboy and during the French-English war he was popularly called "bloody Sweeney," from his habit of calling out the sanguinary details of the fighting, as he traveled up and down the streets selling his "wares." Isaiah Thomas relates a story of him in his History of Printing, how he outwitted the English military officers, when summoned before them for his "traitorous conduct" in selling that "incendiary paper," the Constitutional Courant, which was started during the agitation over the Stamp Act of 1765, and which Lawrence Sweeney secretly distributed in New York. There is a record of the marriage of "Lawrence Swiney and Martha McDowell" at Trinity Church under date of March 25, 1756, and an account of his death in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of April 16, 1770, said "he was as well known in this City as any man in it and will be perhaps as much missed." In all probability, he was buried in Trinity churchyard, but the burial register of the year 1770 was one of those destroyed in the fire of 1776.

That there were several other families of the name in New York is shown by the entries in the public records. A deed from Dennis Sweeney to John Waller dated November 9, 1756, is recorded at the Register's office,[85] and among marriages at Trinity Church there are recorded: Matthew Sweeney and Mary Thorn on October 9, 1756; Edward Swiney and Ann Wellean on March 9, 1767; Jane Sweeney and James Valentine on June 5, 1783, and Cornelius Sweeney and Maria Sweeney on December 4, 1784. The only persons of the name appearing in the burial register were "a child of Mr. Sweeney," who was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on August 5, 1802, and Francis Sweeney who was buried in Trinity on May 8, 1805.

The New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of February 18, 1771, in announcing the death of "Mrs. Susannah Kelly, wife of Mr. William Kelly, merchant of this City," said "her remains were deposited in the Chancel of Trinity Church, attended by a respectable body of the principal Gentlemen and many of her neighbours." This William Kelly was one of the leading merchants and vendue masters of his time in New York, with a store and residence in Wall Street. He and William Hogan appeared before the Common Council on October 6, 1748, and were "sworn in ffreemen of this Corporation," [85a] and on September 29, 1756, he again appeared before the Council, accompanied by Hugh Mulligan, when Kelly was appointed "Assessor for the Dock Yard" and Mulligan Constable of the same ward.[86] Numerous announcements by William Kelly of sales of ships' cargoes, "at his Vendue House opposite the Old Slip Market," appear in the newspapers, and there was no issue of these papers of the year 1751 that did not contain an advertisement by William Kelly, and according to advertisements in the year 1769, he was the owner of large tracts of land in the Province of New Jersey. If we are to judge from a description of his plate, horses, coaches and household furniture when they were offered for sale at the Merchants' Coffee House, a few months after the death of his wife, he must have been a man of considerable wealth and refinement. There was an announcement of his death in the Packet of April 3, 1784, but because of a lapse in the records, I am unable to determine where he was buried, although it is probable that he found his final resting place in Trinity, where his wife was buried in 1771.

The burials in Trinity of ten children, each described as "a child of Mr. Kelly's," are recorded in the parish register on various dates between the years 1777 and 1798. "Mary Kelly, age 79,"was buried in the cemetery attached to St. George's Chapel in Trinity Parish on June 17, 1778, and directly inside the railing on the Broadway side, to the right of the church, may be seen one of the largest vaults in Trinity churchyard, and the inscription on the slab records the death of "Mrs. Mary Kelly, wife of James Kelly, Esq^{r} of Falmouth in the Island of Jamaica," as of September 15, 1800.

A tombstone in Trinity records the death of John Kelly on April 14, 1791. This John Kelly was a son of John Kelly,[87] a lawyer and real estate agent for many years with an office at "49 Wall Street nearly opposite Pitt's Statue," and later at 28 Hanover Square. The elder Kelly appears frequently in the papers as the agent or seller of houses and lots in the present downtown portion of the City, and in

[87] Hall in his History of Eastern Vermont, refers to Kelly as "an Irishman of standing and ability."

Harlem, Bloomingdale, Kingsbridge and Long Island. As illustrating the extent of his business, in one issue of the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury, that of February 26, 1781, he had ten separate advertisements of sales of real estate and sundry legal announcements, and numerous similar advertisements appear in the papers down to the year 1786. His will, which was admitted to probate on January 31, 1799, indicates that he was a native of Roscommon, Ireland. He is sometimes confused with another John Kelly, a prominent New York merchant, who appears in the records as early as 1714.[88] On July 28, 1717, this John Kelly and Anthony Byvanck were the grantees in a deed from one William Green covering the sale of "a certain parcell of Land situate and fronting on a certain Street lately projected and commonly called Nassau Street." [89] And a rather interesting item recorded under date of October 14, 1718, is a lease to John Kelly from Richard Sackett of "a Messuage Dwelling House and Lott of Land No. 8 in the East Ward of the City of New York," for "a ground rent of five shillings" and a yearly rental of "one pepper corn to be paid upon the Feast Day of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, commonly called Lady Day, if the same shall be demanded." [90]

The number of Kellys on record at the Surrogate's and Register's offices alone indicates that the name was well represented in New York in the eighteenth century. Daniel Kelly was appointed executor of the will of Benjamin Scudder, dated May 17, 1732; Henry Kelly, under the will of Harkelaus Brewer on October 1, 1756, and James Dodge named Edward Kelly executor, in his will dated November 28, 1765. The Surrogate appointed Edward Kelly administrator of the estate of William Hicks on October 24, 1745; Richard Kelly, of the estate of Thomas Callanan on July 29, 1761; Daniel Kelly, of the estate of John Healy on January 30, 1781, and on October 25, 1784, the Surrogate selected Morris Kelly to administer the estate of Leonard Bleecker. David Kelly signed as witness to the will of William Jarvis on November 12, 1737; Edward Kelly to that of George Youngs on September 3, 1742, and Timothy Kelly the will of Jonathan Ketcham on February 22, 1751. In the advertising columns of the newspapers we find Michael Kelly in 1778 advertising his business "in Queen Street opposite Chapel Street"; in 1780, "Matthias Kelly, house carpenter, 15 Rutgers Street," and James Kelly, "shipping agent in Broad Street" in 1781. And in addition to these various Kellys, the records of deeds and conveyances indicate that Bernard, Charles, Christopher, Patrick, Robert and Samuel Kelly and John O'Kelly were residents of New York in the eighteenth century.

There are, all told, sixty legal instruments recorded at the office of the Register for the City and County of New York, in which people named Kelly appear as grantors or grantees between the years 1714 and 1797. In the eighteenth century marriage records there are entries of the marriages at Trinity Church of twenty-four different Kellys, and in the baptismal registers the name occurs with the same frequency. Among Irish names the Kellys appear more often than any other in early American records, and it is observed from vital statistics published in Ireland that this also applies to the homeland of the Clan O Calleagh, indicating that the Kellys are the most numerous of all Irish families.

Among burials in Trinity there are recorded: "Mrs. Mooney, age 28," on January 1, 1779; "Mrs. Mooney, age 57," on July 16, 1781, and two children of "Mr. Mooney" in 1783 and 1801. And in St. Paul's there were interred the bodies of "Mr. Mooney, age 22," on December 31, 1801; "Mrs. Mooney, age 81," on November 2, 1802, and "Richard Mooney, age 28," on April 27, 1817. The Edward Mooney who joined the parishioners of Trinity in signing one of the petitions before alluded to, is supposed to have been a brother of William Mooney, the founder of the Tammany Society, and he and his wife, Elizabeth, were the sponsors at the christening of Elizabeth, daughter of William and Abigail Mooney, at Trinity Church on October 3, 1779.

There was another Edward Mooney in business as a provision dealer in the Fly Market, and he and his wife, Susanna, were the parents of six children born in New York between 1780 and 1793, and the baptisms of all of whom are recorded at the Vestry House of Trinity Parish. Others of the name whose children were baptized in Trinity were John and Abigail Mooney on August 22, 1779, and Barnet and Charlotte Mooney on July 31, 1785. And it is of interest also to note that the New York Mooneys and O'Briens were intermarried. Ambrose Mooney and Ann O'Brien were married in Trinity on October 10, 1778, and Henry O'Brien married Mary Mooney on November 14, 1781.

Among the familiar Irish names which appear in the burial records of Trinity Parish, besides those already mentioned, we find

Callaghan	Davan	"Dwire"
Casey	Dempsey	Egan
"Cassedoe"	Dowling	Farrell
Connolly	"Driskill"	Flynn
Daly	Dugan	Gillespie

A "Mr. Callaghan, age 63," described as "an inhabitant" of New York, was buried in Trinity churchyard on March 19, 1779, as well as "John Callahan, age 51," also "an inhabitant," on November 24, 1805. This John Callahan was a New York pilot, and we are told that on April 23, 1789, when General Washington and his party arrived at the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, on his journey to New York to be inaugurated First President of the United States, he was escorted across the river in a barge manned by thirteen New York pilots dressed in white uniforms, one of whom was John Callahan.[91] The first of the name to appear in New York records was Owen Callaghane, witness to a will dated July 29, 1736,[92] and the first mentioned in Trinity Parish records was Dennis Calihan, who was married to Mary Smith by Revd. Samuel Auchmuty, rector of Trinity, on May 1, 1757, and down to 1761 there are also recorded the marriages of Daniel, Elizabeth, John and Judith Callahan. "Ann Callahan, age 34," is recorded among burials in St. Paul's on October 6, 1818.

On October 16, 1757, one Daniel Casey was married to Catherine Smith by Revd. Henry Barclay, rector of Trinity, and both were buried in the churchyard, Daniel on October 2, 1777, and Catherine on January 26, 1781. According to an advertisement in the Mercury of June 30, 1767, Daniel Casey was in business "in Golden Hill opposite the Baptist Meeting House." "Sarah Casey, age 24," was buried in Trinity churchyard on November 6, 1801, and "Mrs. Almy Casey, age 33," wife of James Casey, on March 25, 1802, and there is an entry of the burial of "Mr. Casey, age 79 years," in St. Paul's churchyard on May 9, 1805. The latter was Samuel Casey, whose marriage to Catherine Page on May 8, 1775, appears in the records of Trinity Church. In 1769 he announced through the Mercury his business as a "Silk Dyer and Scourer" with a store "at the upper end of Maiden Lane," later in New Dutch Street and again "in the Broad Way opposite Trinity Church." Twelve people named Casey are recorded in the New York marriage registers between 1757 and 1799.

Others of the name mentioned in the parish records were, John and Mary Casey whose daughter, Elizabeth, was baptized at Trinity on March 8, 1783, with John and Elizabeth McKenny acting as sponsors, and when a daughter of Matthew and Jane Casey was baptized on December 18, 1785, the sponsors were James Hayes and John Farrel. The John Casey here referred to was master of a merchant vessel trading out of the port of New York. Through the columns of Gaine's paper on April 3, 1782, he offered a reward of three guineas for "a negro boy named Cato" who had "deserted from the ship, Thomas," on her arrival from Penobscot, and "who ever finds him" was to "apply at Mrs. McKenny's, No. 31 Broad Street." On April 17, 1782, Casey announced the sailing of the Thomas for Jamaica: "for freight and passage apply to James Kelly at No. 31 Broad Street." On September 4, 1782, the Gazette announced the capture of "the ship, Thomas, Captain Casey, from Penobscot, with a cargo of lumber bound for Jamaica, by His Majesty's Ship Hussar and ordered for the port of New York."

There are several instances of the peculiar spelling of names in these records; as, for example, "Mr. Cassida" who was buried in Trinity on January 5, 1781, and a tombstone in that churchyard has inscriptions stating that it is "Sacred to the Memory of Jane, daughter of John and Mary Ann Cassedoe, who departed this Life December 20th, 1813," and "Mary Ann, the Wife of John Cassedoe, who departed this Life Oct 15th, 1814, aged 34 years." Of course, it can be said with confidence that both names were intended for Cassidy, and it is noted that Charles Cassady, son of John Cassady, was buried in Trinity on September 18, 1816, and a "Jane Cassady, age 38," is recorded as having been buried in St. Paul's churchyard on August 13, 1818.

A "Mrs. Connolly, age 83," was buried in St. Paul's churchyard on June 12, 1802. She was the widow of Dr. Alexander Connolly who, according to the New York newspapers in 1750, was "a medical practitioner in Wall Street," but of the place of whose interment there is no record in the existing burial registers. "Mrs. Connolly, age 35," was buried in Trinity on December 6, 1778. She is supposed to have been the wife of Michael Connolly, an officer of New York troops in the War of the Revolution, and who, according to an advertisement in the Independent Gazette or New York Journal of January 3, 1784, was then a member of the firm of "Nesbitt, Connolly and Company, Vendue and Commission Merchants," who, "being honorably discharged from the service of their country, propose to establish a Vendue and Commission Store at No. 21 opposite the Coffee House Bridge." In 1788 Michael Connolly advertised as "Inspector of Lumber" for the City of New York with an office at 145 Water Street, and there is a notice of his death in the Commercial Advertiser of September 30, 1799. "Susanna Connelly, age 16," appears in the burial registry as having been buried in Trinity churchyard on April 5, 1816, and "Eleanor Connelly, age 38," was buried in St. Paul's on November 17th of the same year.

"Francis Dailey, age 30," was buried in Trinity on March 23, 1778; "Patrick Daly, age 42," on October 29, 1778, and "a child of Mr. Dayley's" on June 30, 1783. "Mary Daley, age 60," was buried in St. Paul's on April 29, 1817.

A stone in Trinity churchyard records the death of "Margaret, daughter of John and Ann Davan, September 1, 1769." "David Davan, age 24," was buried there on August 29, 1779; "John Davan, age 24," on June 13, 1802, and "John Davan, age 76," on November 30, 1803. The latter was a manufacturer of leather goods. A John Davan, who is on record as an officer of New York troops, may possibly have been the same man. He was one of the signers of a petition to the New York Committee of Safety on September 21, 1775, of "the Officers belonging to the Battalions commanded by Colonels Lasher and Hyer, the Officers belonging to the Companies of Artillery, Light-Horse and Hussars and of sundry Officers belonging to the different Beats in the City of New York." [93] Other officers who signed this petition were Daniel McCormick, Thomas and James Moore and John Leary, Jr.

"Mrs. Dempsey, age 36," was buried in St. Paul's on June 11, 1782, and "Mr. Dempsey, age 28," in Trinity on December 27, 1782. In all probability, the latter was John Dempsey, who is recorded as sponsor for a child of Philip and Cornelia Linn on April 11, 1781.

"A child of Jeremiah Driskill" was buried in Trinity on August 21, 1777, and Jeremiah Driskill's wife was buried in the same grave on May 1, 1778, and there are records of the marriage at Trinity Church of John and Eleanor "Driskill" and Elizabeth Driscoll between 1759 and 1777. There is a stone in Trinity which was erected to the memory of Minetta, Jacob and Sarah "Driskil" who died between 1803 and 1817, and there is an entry in the burial register under date of July 21, 1805, of the death of Sarah "Griscoll" which I believe to have been intended for "Driscoll."

The burial of "Mrs. Dugan, age 27," is recorded as of [93] In Force's American Archives; 4th Ser., Vol. 3, p. 758.

August 6, 1777, of "Mr. Dugan, age 40," on February 13, 1779, and of two children of "Captain Dugan" on July 3, 1780, all in St. Paul's churchyard. "William Duggan, age 48," was buried in Trinity on May 6, 1805, and a stone in St. Paul's records the death of "Bridget, wife of Thomas Duggan," without date. One Thomas Duggan, who probably was the same man, was married to Elizabeth McKinley at Trinity Church on December 24, 1787. When John, son of John and Martha Dugan, was baptized in Trinity on August 27, 1779, Bryan Conner, Edward Flin and Martha Duggan were the sponsors. A John Dugan advertised his paint store "on Murray's Wharf" in 1782.

"Philip Dwire, age 32," was buried in Trinity on August 16, 1778, and a "Mr. Dwire, age 35," in the same cemetery on July 26, 1783, and the parish records also contain entries of the marriages of Margaret "Dwier" to Pierce Egan on December 7, 1773, and of Edmund Dwyer to Catherine Patterson on January 7, 1783.

Several Dowlings were buried in St. Paul's—"Mr. Dowling" on September 13, 1780, and "Mrs. Dowling," probably his widow, on September 30, 1781, but there is nothing to indicate the location of their grave. There is a stone in that churchyard with an inscription stating that "Heare Lies the Body of Laurence, the Son of Laurence & Sarah Dowling—Departed this Life April 25th, 1783—Aged 4 Years 8 Months & 16 Days." Margaret, daughter of Laurence and Sarah Dowling, was baptized in Trinity on November 12, 1780, as well as Jane, daughter of a Lawrence Dowling by his wife, Jane, on March 5, 1783.

A stone in Trinity was erected over the grave of two sons of John and Sarah Egan who died in the year 1751. The father undoubtedly was the John Egan who, in every issue of the New York Evening Post in 1751, advertised for sale "lumber, mackrel by the barrel or larger quantity" and sundry other goods, and the "Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council" of September 9, 1753, show that John Eagan, probably the same man, was appointed "Constable of the Montgomery Ward." A "Mrs. Egan, age 36," who was buried in St. Paul's on December 12, 1783, is thought to have been the wife of Thomas Egan who conducted a private school at No. 30 King Street.

There are two entries in the parish records, each covering the burial in Trinity of "Mr. Flynn," one aged 41 on September 6, 1782, and the other aged 48 on September 15th of the same year. There is also an entry of the burial in the same cemetery of "a child of Mr. Flinn's" on June 6, 1781, and a stone in Trinity records the death of "Sarah Flyn, daughter of Thomas and Abigail Flyn," on October 7, 1800. There is no means of identifying the Flynns here referred to among the several different families of the name who resided in New York. In the will of "Thadie Flin of New York mariner," dated January 1, 1758, he named his "trusty and loving friend, Daniel Sullivan of New York, vintner," sole legatee,[94] and Patrick Flyn signed as witness to the will of Elizabeth Wall, dated May 26, 1761.[95] There was another Patrick Flynn in New York, whose will dated September 18, 1798, indicates that he was a native of "Two Mile Bridge in the Parish of Dungarvin, County Waterford, Ireland," and in which he named as beneficiaries Catherine, Elinor, Mary, Edward and John Flynn, "Mrs." McGrath, James Fitzgerald and William Carberry, with "Rev. Father Burke" and Andrew Morris as executors. John Flynn was one of the sponsors for John, son of John and Mary Farrell, when baptized at Trinity

[94] Surrogate's records, Lib. 21, p. 121.
[95] Ibid., Lib. 23, p. 116.

Church on July 15, 1759, and at the baptism of James, son of James and Ann Flynn, on December 13, 1780, Terence Kearn and Judith Walsh were the sponsors. Mary "Flin" and William Burke acted as sponsors at the christening of a son of George and Sophia Slater on July 11, 1779; Mary, daughter of Thomas and Phebe "Fling," was baptized at Trinity on August 1, 1779, and Mary, daughter of John and Mary Flynn, on November 12, 1780.

James Flynn was a market gardener and horticulturist in the old village of Greenwich, or what is now the Twelfth Ward of the City, that thickly populated district between Greenwich Avenue and the North River. There is a long advertisement by him in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of May 5, 1783, announcing the sale of "the lease of ten acres of land possessed by James Flynn at Greenwich, laid out in the best kitchen gardens on the island, planted with all sorts of fruit trees and flowering shrubs . . . greenhouse stocked with orange and lemon trees . . . with a variety of other house plants . . . hyacinths and tulips in great plenty, with various sorts of other bulbous roots . . . for further particulars apply to said Flynn on the premises." David Flynn announced through the same paper on June 23, 1783, that "he has quitted business and is now moved from No. 3 Fly Market to Captain Neil McNeil's house in Water Street, where he would wish all indebted to him would call and make immediate payment," that his store was for sale and he described it as "without exception one of the best stands for business in the City."

The burial in Trinity of "John Farrel, age 29, a stranger," is recorded under date of August 25, 1777, and a "child of John Farrol, age 4 years," on October 17, 1777. "Thomas Ferral, age 35," was buried in St. Paul's on February 18, 1780, and there is a stone in that churchyard erected "In Memory of William Farrell who departed this life the 28th of July 1808." As in the many other cases cited, the name Farrell appears frequently in the parish records, and among marriages in Trinity Church between 1752 and the end of the century, there are recorded those of George, Lawrence, Margaret, Mary, Martin, Stephen and William Farrell, three Catherines and four John Farrells, John "Ferril," John "Ferrell" and Michael O'Farrell. There are two deeds recorded at the Register's office covering sales of houses and lots in New York, one from Matthew Banks dated January 24, 1758, and the other from Daniel Libbey, dated May 19, 1760, both to John Farrell.[96] On May 4, 1758, John Farrell executed a power of attorney in favor of his wife, Jeane,[97] and on July 25th of the same year Cornelius Healey of New York appointed "his trusty and loving friend, Jean Farrell," his attorney, "to receive all debts and moneys accruing to him." John Farrell was appointed "Constable of the East Ward" at a meeting of the Common Council on September 29, 1766, and at the annual meeting of the Corporation on September 29, 1768, John O'Farrill was appointed to the same post. William Farrell was sworn in "Constable of the North Ward" on October 14, 1755.

The New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of October 13, 1777, published an account of the burial in Trinity churchyard four days before of "the remains of Jane Campbell, widow of Robert Campbell, and daughter of Andrew Gillespie of Enniskillen, Ireland," and in the same paper of February 14, 1780, there was an announcement of the death of "Mrs. Elizabeth Gillespie, wife of John Gillespie of New York," and of her burial in St. Paul's. "Mary Gillespie, age 28," appears in the parish records as having been buried in Trinity on May 17, 1805; another "Mary Gillespie, age 32," was buried in Trinity on January 11, 1818, and "Mary Jane Gillespie, age 21," was buried there on February 23, 1819. There were several New York merchants of the name. John Gillespie advertised from 213 Queen Street on March 24, 1783, and Thomas and James Gillespie advertised their dry goods and millinery store at 15 William Street in the New York Packet of April 3, 1784.

"Mrs. McKenny, age 58," was buried in Trinity on January 20, 1784. She was the wife of John McKenny, a merchant tailor and haberdasher, whose advertisements in the newspapers in 1766 said he had for sale various kinds of dry goods. In 1768 he announced the importation from London of all sorts of men's and women's apparel, and in 1770 "a neat assortment of superfine broad-cloths" for sale "at his store in Broad Street opposite Beaver Street." In St. Paul's churchyard there is a stone bearing inscriptions recording the deaths of three children of William and Mary McKenny between 1784 and 1789, and of Mary McKenny, the mother, on February 7, 1807. According to an announcement in the Packet of April 3, 1786, William McKenny conducted "a Stone-Cutting business on the North River opposite Paules-Hook Ferry-House."

There is an entry under date of December 30, 1800, of the burial in Trinity churchyard of "a child of Mrs. McGown's". This child was Andrew, the seven year old son of Andrew and Margaret McGowan, whose name is perpetuated in one of New York's historic landmarks, McGowan's Pass in Central Park. This family has had an interesting history. In 1740 Daniel McGowan, the first of the name in New York, married Catherine, widow of a sea captain named Luke Shourd, and they had one son, Andrew. In 1742 Daniel McGowan was recorded as transferring lands in Harlem to Benjamin Benson,[97a] and Andrew McGowan, believed to have been his brother, is mentioned in Harlem records of the year 1749 in connection with a famous controversy between the Freeholders of the township and the Corporation of the City of New York over the ownership of the "common lands" of the township. In 1745 Daniel purchased a farm from Daniel Devoor, part of which is now included in Central Park, where he built a stone residence which he sold thirteen years later to John Livingston, the eminent New York merchant.[97] It is said that he began life in this country as a peddler; but became a seafaring man and was lost at sea a short time before the Revolution. Riker, in his Revised History of Harlem, refers to him as "Captain Daniel McGowan, Shipmaster of New York," and he is so mentioned in the newspapers of the day.

About this time one Jacob Dyckman had a tavern at the place that later was called "McGowan's Pass" in what is now Central Park, on the post road from the City to Harlem and Kingsbridge. After Daniel McGowan's death, the tavern was purchased by his widow, and "here at this much-travelled pass", writes Dr. Edward Hagaman Hall of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, "the widow McGown and her son, Andrew, not only found mental diversion from the traffic of this important thoroughfare, but they also found ample patronage for the public house which they maintained". It was then called the "Black Horse Tavern" and was "a favorite resort for the gentlemen coming from the City with their foxhounds to hunt".

[97a] Records of Deeds and Conveyances, Lib. 30, p. 498.
[97b] Ibid., Lib. 35, p. 50.

When the British took possession of the City in September, 1776, it was over this road the American troops passed on their retreat to Fort Washington. British officers occupied the tavern, and the ledges of rock on both sides of the road furnishing an ideal place for defence, they erected there a chain of fortifications which they held until Evacuation Day, November 25, 1783. On that day McGowan's Pass Tavern was the starting point of the most significant parade ever held in the United States, for it was in the woods in the immediate vicinity that the American forces encamped prior to their triumphant march into the City on the heels of the discomfitted British army. A story is told of the father of the boy who was buried in Trinity churchyard, which is worth relating here. One version of it says: "At the McGowan tavern on the memorable 15th of September (1776), the last of the tired stragglers passed and scarcely were they out of sight when a party of showily-uniformed British horsemen rode up, followed by a long line of troops, and demanded of a lad who happened to be there if he knew in which direction the rebels had gone. The lad was Andrew McGowan, a faithful little patriot, who had no intention of helping the enemy. Pressed into service, he guided the hated red-coats along a road that led them away from the weary Americans, and after taking them over a long roundabout path, he managed to slip away and get back to his home. In spite of this clever ruse, the English met a few of the retreating patriots and a skirmish took place in which one American was killed".[97c] Another account speaks of "the merry dance over hill and dale and marsh and meadow which little Andrew led the English soldiers, until they reached the Hudson River, but not until the Americans had secured themselves behind the intrenchments of Fort Washington." It has been well said that "a boy that day was the salvation of his country!"

The name is spelled variously in New York records and the descendants of Daniel McGowan use the form, "McGown." Two historical writers insist that Daniel was "a Scotsman," and Edward Hagaman Hall, an otherwise careful investigator, says "the name McGown indicates his Scotch antecedents," oblivious of the fact that the recorded spelling of a man's name does not take away his nationality. In the Genealogical Department of the New York Public Library there is some "Manuscript Data Relating to the McGowan Family," formerly owned by James Riker, historian of Harlem, part of which is an original letter to Riker from Dr. W. G. Wood, born of an old Harlem family in 1813, and who knew Andrew McGowan intimately. In this letter Dr. Wood related his reminiscences of Harlem families and said: "As to the McGowan family, they date back to about the same time. McGowan was a native of the Emerald Isle and came to this country to seek his fortune, and with a pack on his back went out among the farmers in those days selling them goods," etc. Certain it is that McGowan is an old family name, common in Ireland for centuries. Its original Gaelic form was MacGobhann (pronounced as if spelled moc-gow-un), which means literally "the son of the smith," and O'Hart says "the McGowans were a Milesian family and were remarkable for their great strength and bravery," and their Irish crest and coat-of-arms may be seen in his Irish Pedigrees.[97d] I claim, therefore, and properly so, that Daniel McGowan was an Irishman.

[97d] Vol. I.

Of the vaults in Trinity, there is one containing the remains of Hugh Gaine, a native of Belfast, Ireland, and a famous character in New York history. Gaine came to this country in 1745 and began business in the selling of books and stationery "at the sign of the Bible and Crown" in Hanover Square. The business was extensive and lucrative and Gaine continued it in Hanover Square for nearly forty years. In 1752 he established a newspaper called the New York Mercury, which in 1768 became the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury. I have examined every available issue of Gaine's paper,[98] and they show that from the earliest years of its existence it contained some unusually well-written essays, and Isaiah Thomas states that "the collection of intelligence in this paper was not inferior to that of any paper published in the City." [99] And North, in his work on American newspapers, asserts that "Gaine's paper was one of the best in all the Colonies in its collection of intelligence and it gained a comparatively extensive circulation in the City and surrounding settlements." [100] Although a successful business man, Gaine had a checkered career. Prior to 1776, the tone of his paper indicates that he was genuinely in sympathy with the revolt of the colonists, but toward the close of that year, when the American army evacuated New York, he wavered in the Cause and thereafter either took a neutral attitude or allied himself openly with the British. In 1783 he petitioned and obtained permission from the Legislature to remain in the City, and thereafter he continued his publishing business until his death in 1807.

A few steps from the Gaine vault may be seen a slab over another vault, which bears the simple inscription: "Whalie and Mulligan's Vault." The "Whalie" here referred to was Thomas Whaley, one time sexton of Trinity Church, a native of Donegal, Ireland. He married Sarah Mulligan, sister of the famous Hercules Mulligan. He died in 1780 and his body was placed in this vault on October 30th of that year, wherein also lie the remains of his wife and several of the Mulligans. Sarah Mulligan, aged 80, mother of Hercules, appears in the parish records as having been buried in Trinity on October 13, 1777, and it is probable that she also was placed in this vault. Another Sarah Mulligan, born in New York in 1772, was buried in Trinity churchyard on December 9, 1810.

On October 27, 1773, Hercules Mulligan was married in Trinity Church to Elizabeth Sanders,[1] daughter of John Sanders of New York and a niece of Admiral Sanders of the British Navy. He died on March 4, 1825, and was buried in the tomb of the Sanders family, then on the Trinity Place or west side of the churchyard, immediately at the rear of the edifice. Some years ago, when the church was enlarged, several graves and vaults, among them the Sanders vault, were covered over by the new extension erected on the Trinity Place side, and a diagram of the old church at the parish vestry house shows the original location of this vault, the spot being directly under the present chancel, a circumstance that may be regarded as of some distinction for the Revolutionary hero, Hercules Mulligan. There is an entry in the Burial Register indicating that he was buried in St. John's cemetery, then at Hudson and Varick Streets. Yet, according to a document in the handwriting of his son, William C. Mulligan, in the possession of one of his descendants, his body was placed in the vault of the Sanders family, in the location above indicated.

Hercules Mulligan had a highly interesting career. He was born in Ireland in the year 1740 and was brought to this country by his parents when six years old. He was very active as a member of the Sons of Liberty, was a member of the Committee of One Hundred, organized by the patriots to take over the government of the City in 1775, and of several other Revolutionary Committees, such as the Committee of Correspondence, the Committee of Observation and the Committee of Secrecy and Inspection. His name is associated with leading New York patriots of his time, and through his marriage to Elizabeth Sanders he became allied with one of New York's distinguished families, since his sister-in-law, Ann Sanders, became the wife of John William Livingston at Trinity Church on June 2, 1777.[2] It was at the home of Hercules Mulligan in Water Street that Alexander Hamilton lived after his arrival here from the West Indies in 1772, and among the "Papers of Major-General Alexander Hamilton" at the Library of Congress, I found a remarkably interesting document, "The Narrative of Hercules Mulligan," containing some important particulars of Hamilton's early life in New York, and of the first attack made by the British on the New York patriots in 1775. In 1777, Washington selected Mulligan on the recommendation of Alexander Hamilton as his confidential correspondent in the City of New York, in which capacity he served well and faithfully throughout the Revolution, and he is known to have been the means of twice saving the beloved Commander-in-Chief of the patriot army, once from certain capture and on another occasion from intended assassination by the Tories. He is one of the lost links in the Revolutionary history of the City of New York, since his name and fame were hardly known to the public until recent days. As already stated, he was a Vestryman of Trinity from 1784 to 1787 and the family records show that his body was interred in the churchyard on March 6, 1825. His son, John W. Mulligan, was a lawyer of some prominence in New York during the first half of the nineteenth century. He was Colonel of the 5th New York regiment and in 1810 he was appointed Surrogate. He was buried in Trinity churchyard on January 18, 1862, and in all probability in "Whalie and Mulligan's Vault."

In Ireland the Mulligans were an old Catholic family, and in all probability, Hugh Mulligan, father of Hercules, was a Catholic prior to his arrival in this country. But, as already stated, like nearly all Catholic families in New York at that time, having no means of practising their religion, they drifted gradually into association with other churches. Hercules became an Episcopalian and he and his son, John W. Mulligan, attended Trinity Church, but the family of his son, William, became Presbyterians. To some it may be a surprise to learn that about this period many Irishmen in America were members of the Masonic fraternity; there was then no interdiction against Catholics joining that Order. For example, the first lodge of Masons in the Province of New York was at Johnstown in 1767 and was called "St. Patrick's Lodge," and it is said there were several Irishmen on its roll. Sir William Johnson, a Protestant from County Meath, Ireland, was its presiding officer and Michael Byrne, a Catholic and a native of Wicklow, was its "Junior Warden." At Portsmouth, N. H., there was also a "St. Patrick's Lodge" and in New York City there was an "Erin Lodge." With regard to the New York lodge, an amusing incident has been related to me by one of Hercules Mulligan's descendants. Mulligan was a member of the lodge, which used to meet in John Street between Broadway and Nassau Street. While Hercules was known to the English military officers as "rebel Mulligan," it is obvious they had no inkling of the role he was really playing as confidential agent of General Washington, notwithstanding that when the traitor, Arnold, came to New York in 1780 he had Mulligan arrested on a charge of espionage, and although he pressed the charge vigorously he was unable to convict the prisoner. Toward the close of the war, however, suspicion was again strongly directed toward Mulligan, and on one occasion "a Tory in the pay of the enemy chased him down Great Georges Street (now Broadway) and into John Street. Mulligan took refuge in the building where the Masons met and entered the room just as the lodge was in session, with the Tory after him in hot pursuit. The Tory was also a member of the Order, so there was nothing for it but to desist, and thus the redoubtable Mulligan escaped from what probably would have been serious consequences!" Only a short time after this exciting incident, Mulligan was signally honored by no less distinguished a Mason than Washington himself, when, on Evacuation Day, November 25, 1783, after the victorious American troops were reviewed on the Bowling Green, he took breakfast with the Mulligan family at their home, No. 23 Queen Street, now 218 Pearl Street.

An Irish physician named Dr. James Magrath is said to have been buried in St. Paul's churchyard in 1774, and while it is highly probable the statement is correct, it cannot be verified because of the destruction of the records. As early as 1740 this James Magrath kept school in "the lower end of Dock Street," now that part of Pearl below Wall Street. He had studied medicine in Trinity College, Dublin, and after some time devoted to teaching he was admitted to practise in New York. It is evident he held a high place in the medical profession, and Rivington's New York Gazeteer of April 14, 1774, thus announced his death: "Yesterday morning about nine o'clock died in a very advanced age Dr. James Magra, a gentleman of great learning and a physician of the most exalted eminence, which has been experienced by many thousands upon the American Continent and especially by all ranks of people in this Province, which he has for a great number of years made his chief residence." James Grant Wilson tells us, in his Memorial History of New York, that "Dr. James Magrath for nearly forty years maintained a reputation for austere manners and original views. He advocated the free use of water as a curative agent. He came here in company with Drs. John Brett and Thomas Rodman." Under his will dated May 25, 1773, he divided his estate among his wife and three sons. The will of another James McGrath of New York was dated September 13, 1765. He left his property to his wife, Mary, sons, John and Robert, and daughters, Mary and Helena McGrath. It is noted also that "Myles Magrath, a native of Ireland residing in New York, labourer," made his will on October 10, 1798, naming his brother Patrick and "Rev. Father Burke" among the legatees, and John Nunen and Maurice Condon were the witnesses.

In St. Paul's churchyard there is a stone over the grave of "Capt Thomas Fitz Gerald—Deceased July 19th 1788." I am unable to find any trace of him in New York records and there is a lapse in the burial register between January, 1784, and December, 1800, because of the destruction of the original records by fire. No officer of the name appears in the New York muster-rolls or other records of the Revolutionary army, nor do the available shipping statistics contain the name of any sea-captain named Thomas FitzGerald. "A child of William Fitzgerald" was buried in Trinity on October 11, 1779, and "a child of Mrs. Fitzgerald" on May 4, 1780. The latter was Mrs. Mary Fitzgerald, then the widow of George Fitzgerald, to whom she was married at Trinity Church on January 6, 1766. She was in business as a milliner, and in Gaine's paper of July 13, 1778, she advertised that she "has for ſale in Smith ſtreet the corner of Princeſs Street, a Compleat and genteel aſſortment of milinary of the neweſt faſhion—alſo various other ſmall articles for female uſe—ſhe thanks her friends, cuſtomers and the public in general for the favours ſhe has received and flatters herſelf that her attention to them in the future will induce a continuation of their cuſtom." There are entries of the marriages of nine Fitzgeralds at Trinity Church between 1748 and 1796.

Another stone in St. Paul's has an inscription stating that it was erected "In Memory of William and Rebecca, the beloved children of William Cochran, a native of County Tyrone in Ireland, by his wife Rebecca of the same Kingdom. This stone was erected as the last and sorrowful tribute of Parental Love. William died on the 6 of August 1787." William Cochran, the father of these children, was one of the numerous Irish schoolmasters in New York at this time. He came to America about the close of the Revolution and in 1784 he established in Maiden Lane the "Columbia College Grammar School," which has been described as "probably the best school in the City," and its master as "a highly accomplished and elegant scholar." [28] His wife was also from Ireland, as is seen from an announcement of their marriage in the New York Daily Advertiser of October 4, 1785, which said that she had just arrived "in the Dublin Packet from Dublin." In December, 1784, Master Cochran was appointed "Professor of the Greek and Latin Languages" in Columbia College, and his first pupil there was De Witt Clinton, afterwards Governor of the State of New York.

The crude inscription on a tombstone in St. Paul's churchyard, erected to the memory of an Irishman who was born at Mount Charles, County Donegal, attracts one's attention. The inscription is as follows: "In Memory of Edward Mcally who departed this life Jan 16th 1796, aged 28 years & 2 months. Born in the Countie of Tinygall and the toune of Mountcharis, a native of Irland."

Among burials in St. Paul's, that of an Irishman named Martin Foy is recorded as of June 24, 1780. Foy is mentioned several times in the newspapers and seems to have been one of the well known citizens of New York in his day. He kept a "Dancing, Fencing and Music School" for several years at 321 Dock Street, and in Rivington's Gazette of July 12, 1780, there is an advertisement by "Fagan and Dean, Vendue Masters," offering for sale "a parcel of household furs and an elegant assortment of wearing apparel, some of them silver laced; also a choice collection of music books with instruments," etc., "late the property of Martin Foy, Music Master, deceased"; and "the creditors of the said Foy are desired to furnish by the 20th instant their accounts properly authenticated to Patrick Ford, Taylor, Administrator to said Foy, at the house of Mr. Fogan," etc. His name is spelled "Martin Fahy" in the records of the Surrogate's Court, in an entry covering the granting of letters of administration to his estate to Patrick Ford on July 7, 1780.

In St. Paul's may be seen a stone over the grave of "John Dixey, Sculptor by profession, Native of Dublin, and a member of the Royal Academy, London, who arrived in this his adopted country in 1789. Departed this Life July 31st 1820, aged 58 years." In St. Paul's churchyard also, were placed the remains of Francis Shannon, who died on August 27, 1798. That he was a youth of some parts may be assumed from an announcement in The Spectator of August 29, 1798, of "the death of Francis Shannon, a native of Ireland, aged 21 years," which said that "in him was combined every social virtue that does honor to humanity, and whose abilities were capable of arising to the most elevated station." One John Shannon was also buried in St. Paul's and the inscription on his tombstone says that he was "born in Hilshorn in the County Down, Ireland," and died on September 3, 1816.

One of the conspicuous monuments in St. Paul's churchyard stands over the graves of John Constable and his wife, Jane, and their sons, William and James. The inscriptions say that John Constable died in New York on April 17, 1785, and William and James in 1803 and 1807 respectively. John Constable was a resident of New York for more than half a century and the first appearance of his name is under date of 1735 when he was made a Freeman by the Common Council.[3] The family had been in Ireland since the early part of the seventeenth century, and one of their descendants now living in New York informs me that "John Constable's grandfather signed the warrant for the execution of the English King, Charles the First." According to the inscription on the monument, William Constable was born in Dublin on January 1, 1751, and during the Revolution he served as an aide to Lafayette. He was, perhaps, one of the most successful Irishmen of his time in this country and his name survives in the great Fifth Avenue dry-goods house of Arnold, Constable and Company of New York. He was a partner of Robert and Gouverneur Morris, which firm did a very extensive importing and financial business with European and Asiatic countries. As an instance of the extent of his enterprises, it may be mentioned that he and Daniel McCormick and Alexander McComb, all three natives of Ireland, and each, in turn, president of the Society of the Friendly Sons of Saint Patrick in New York, were associated at one time in the purchase of a tract of land known as the "ten Townships," comprising about three and a half million acres, embracing what are now St. Lawrence, Jefferson, Lewis and Franklin Counties and part of Oswego and Herkimer Counties in the State of New York. William Constable was an ardent Irishman and was the founder of the original Society of the Friendly Sons of Saint Patrick in Philadelphia in the year 1771, and he coöperated with Daniel McCormick in the establishment of the present New York society in 1784. His wife, née Ann Townsend, who had been a schoolmate of Martha Custis, Washington's wife, was also buried in St. Paul's churchyard.

A "child of Mr. Hurley" was buried in St. Paul's on July 5, 1778. It is not possible to identify this Hurley, because several of the name were early residents of New York. John Hurley married Elizabeth Hannan on August 17, 1748; a John Hurley married Jane Hogan on March 21, 1749; another John Hurley married Mary Fitzgerald on May 24, 1767; a John Hurley married Elizabeth Allen on February 2, 1782; William Hurley married Elizabeth Mills on April 9, 1785, and there is an entry of the marriage of Catherine Hurley (daughter of John Hurley) and Dennis O'Brien on September 23, 1793, all in Trinity Church.

A "child of Mr. McClennahan's" was buried in St. Paul's on April 26, 1779. The only man of the name mentioned in New York records was an Irish schoolmaster, John McClenahan, who had a private school in Water Street in 1777, as may be seen from his interesting announcement in Hugh Gaine's paper on December 13th of that year, "where," he said, "youth will be instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic, bookkeeping, guaging, dialing, surveying, navigation, vocal church musick," etc., and he guaranteed that "the greatest attention will be paid to and the utmost endeavours used to rectify their morals!" The teachers of those days were not at all backward in announcing their qualifications; advertisements of this kind appeared regularly in the newspapers and in many of these instances the teachers were natives of Ireland. It is possible also that the "Mr. McClennan, age 37," whose burial in Trinity churchyard on June 23, 1780, was so recorded, was the schoolmaster here referred to.

Under date of December 12, 1780, there is an entry of the burial in Trinity churchyard of "Mrs. Connery, age 45," the wife of Nicholas Connery, a harness-maker, who, according to his advertisements, had his "shop in the Red Lion in Beekman's Slip." There was a Nicholas Connery, a schoolmaster in Golden Hill, now John Street, in the late years of the eighteenth century. The "Mr. Dougherty" whose child was buried in Trinity on July 26, 1778, was a "tavern-keeper at the sign of the Happy Man near Brownejohn's Wharf," and "Mrs. Feeley" who was buried on May 19, 1779, was the wife of Mark Feeley, who advertised as a "lawyer in French-Church Street."

tenant of the First New Jersey regiment in the Revolution, was buried in Trinity on January 5, 1801. Costigan was wounded and taken prisoner at the siege of Fort Washington on November 16, 1776, and was confined in a prison ship in New York harbor for two years. Heitman, in his Historical Record of the Officers of the Continental Army, informs us that Costigan was exchanged in December, 1778; he "did not return to the army, but served as a spy in New York City from 1779 to the close of the war." His name is listed in the New York Census of 1790, and on his death on March 9, 1822, he was buried in Trinity churchyard. He was a son of Francis Costigan, a New Jersey lawyer who is mentioned occasionally in the newspapers as practising in the New York courts, and in an announcement of his death in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of July 12, 1773, he was described as "an eminent practitioner in the law." He was a native of Ireland, and first appears in New York records on December 21, 1733, as a beneficiary under the will of his father-in-law, Anthony Byvanck.

"Mrs. Fogarty, age 49," who was buried in Trinity on September 12, 1777, is assumed to have been the wife of Edward Fogarty, a schoolmaster, since he was the only person of the name mentioned in the public records. In 1786, Fogarty's school was at No. 46 Wall Street, according to announcements in the newspapers in that year. On December 12, 1801, there is an entry of the burial in St. Paul's churchyard of "Mr. Flanagan, age 16," son of Christopher Flanagan, a native of Dublin, Ireland, who came to New York in the year 1776. In the New York Geological and Biographical Record (Vol. 8) Flanagan is described as "one of the old Pearl Street merchants and a man of more than ordinary attainments, who fought on the American side in the Revolutionary War." Soon after his arrival here, Christopher Flanagan joined the Continental Navy, in which he acted as "Captain's Clark" until the close of the Revolutionary struggle, and for his services he received from the government an allotment of lands in the Western Reserve. After the war he went back to Ireland, but returned to New York in 1787 and opened a private school at No. 29 Ann Street, and later a bookstore on the present site of the National Bank of Commerce at Nassau and Cedar Streets. Later, he established "a general store" in Pearl Street, which business he conducted with great success until his death in 1805. Two of his sons, James and John R. Flanagan, were prominent New York lawyers in the early years of the last century and James was a charter member of the "Society of Tammany or Columbian Order," and was a Justice of the City Court.

Among local news published in Rivington's Gazette of December 22, 1774, this item appears: "On Thursday last, died at his lodgings in this City Mr. James Murphy Tharp, a Gentleman of the Island of Jamaica, aged 19 years. The youthful victim always claims a sympathising tear, but when possessed of virtues which presage a rising greatness, its fate adds poignancy to grief which the heart will feel but cannot utter." It may be assumed from this that the deceased was a young man of excellent parts, since it is unusual to find such laudatory remarks concerning any individual in the newspapers of the time. He was buried in Trinity churchyard, and from the fact that his name is also spelled "Tharpe" in the records, in all likelihood his proper name was Tarpey.

Under date of August 19, 1780, there is an entry of the burial in Trinity of a "Mr. Kearn," and there are indications that he was either the brother or son of Terence Kerin, a New York lawyer who appears frequently in local records as the representative of large landed interests in New York and New Jersey. The name is spelled "Kerin" in all other records but those of Trinity Parish. "Terence Kerin, Attorney at Law in Stone Street opposite the Post office," announced through the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of August 6, 1770, the sale of several tracts of land, comprising upwards of 20,000 acres, in various parts of the Province of New York. He was very active in the business life of the City for many years.

"Myles Sherbrooke, age 71," was buried in Trinity on May 2, 1805. He was a native of Ireland, and according to advertisements in the newspapers in 1774 he was then a member of the firm of Perry, Hayes and Sherbrooke, cotton and leather merchants, and an advertisement by Thomas Lynch in Holt's New York Journal of May 25, 1775, shows that he lived "in Duke Street, which was known by the name of Bayard Street, next door to John Livingston, Esq." In a list of refugees who left New York when the British army took possession of the City in 1776, there appear the names of three Irishmen, Myles Sherbrooke, Patrick Dennis and Samuel Loudon,[4] and when Dennis returned to New York in 1783 he was one of the signers of the congratulations to General Washington and Governor Clinton, and on November 18, 1783, he was on a "Committee of Exiles to conduct the procession on Evacuation Day." [5]

I am of the belief that Patrick Dennis was also buried either in Trinity or St. Paul's churchyard, although there is no entry of it in the existing parish records. He was an engineer and at one time commanded a merchant vessel plying out of New York harbor. In 1775 he served as Captain of Artillery and was a member of the Revolutionary Committee of Secrecy and Inspection. The Journals of the Provincial Congress show that in September, 1776, the New York Committee of Safety requested "Patt" Dennis to put down such obstructions in the East River as would prevent the British warships from passing up the Sound, and during the next year he was in charge of the building of boats at Poughkeepsie for the use of the American troops.

A number of McGuires appear in the public records of the City of New York, as well as in the baptismal, marriage and burial registers of Trinity Parish. The first of the name in New York records was Matthew McGuire, who appears in the "Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council" of March 29, 1738, as lessee from the Corporation of "22 acres of Land with the House or Tenement to the Westward of Saw Kill Bridge, late in the occupation of Jockham Anderson," for a term of "One and Twenty Years at the yearly rent of Forty Shillings to Commence the 25th day of March, 1737," and an assignment of this lease from Matthew McGuire to David Prevoost was recorded on January 9, 1760. On September 27, 1738, the Common Council appointed Matthew McGuire "Constable for the Bowery Division"; on June 16, 1758, he is recorded as the grantee in a deed from the executors of Samuel Groendyck,[6] and Matthew McGuire and his wife, Elizabeth, conveyed to George Schmelzel "Lot number 639 in the Out Ward of the City of New York" by deed dated February 22, 1768.[7] One Arnold Baylis executed a power of attorney to "Peter Maguire of New York" on January 29,

[6] Records of Deeds and Conveyances, Lib. 41, p. 63.
[7] Ibid., Lib. 52, p. 380.

1752;[8] among the deeds and conveyances may also be seen entries recording Michael and Dennis McGuire in the years 1757 and 1798 respectively;[9] "Richard McGuyre" appears as a voter in a "Poll List of New York—February, 1761;"[10] the will of John McGuire of New York is on record at the Surrogate's office under date of June 22, 1782,[11] and Cornelius McGuire was one of the legatees named in the will of Cornelius Polhemus, dated August 8, 1785.

Among the baptisms in Trinity Church between 1791 and 1801 there are recorded eight children of Thomas and Elizabeth McGuire and four children of Matthew and Elizabeth McGuire, and among the marriages we find: Hugh McGuire and Catharine Morris on July 30, 1758; Dennis McGuire and Sarah Goodwin on October 30, 1759; Margaret McGuire and John Lewis on June 19, 1760; William McGuire and Elizabeth Crawford on January 29, 1765; Eleanor McGuire and John McClean on December 31, 1779; Catherine McGuire and Asa Anderson on January 10, 1791, and Bridget McGuire and William Welch on July 17, 1799. While it is probable that some of the foregoing McGuires were buried in Trinity or St. Paul's churchyard, the existing parish records contain only two entries indicating the burial of persons of the name in the eighteenth century, each recorded as "A child of Mr. McGuire's," on November 17, 1778, and August 16, 1781, and the only other McGuires recorded as having been buried in Trinity were: "Dennis McGuire, age 48," on February 7, 1817; "Margaret Macguire" on June 23, 1817; "Margaret McGuire, age 21," on May 16, 1818, and "Dennis McGuire, age 31," on September 24, 1819.

The most interesting inscriptions in St. Paul's are those engraven on the Emmet, MacNeven and Montgomery monuments, the first two in the forefront of the churchyard, and the Montgomery monument in the porch of the Chapel, all three facing Broadway. General Montgomery's parents were natives of Donegal, but he was born in Dublin County in the year 1738, and nearly forty-three years after his death his remains were moved from Quebec and re-interred with imposing ceremonies in St. Paul's Chapel. The inscription on his monument is as follows:

"This Monument is erected by order of Congress 25th Jan'ry, 1776, to transmit to Posterity a grateful remembrance of the patriotism, conduct, enterprize and perseverance of Major General Richard Montgomery, who after a series of successes amidst

1775, Aged 37 years.

The State of New York caused the Remains of Major Gen'l Richard Montgomery to be conveyed from Quebec and Deposited beneath this Monument
the 8th day of July, 1818."

It seems to be the general impression that Thomas Addis Emmet and Dr. William James MacNeven were also buried in St. Paul's. But, the fact is that Emmet's remains were placed in the tomb of his friend, Chancellor Jones, in the little cemetery adjoining the Church of St. Mark's in the Bowerie at Tenth Street and Second Avenue, and MacNeven's bones lie in the old Riker family burial ground, on the shore of Bowery Bay near Astoria.[12] The Emment mon-

It bears inscriptions in Gaelic, English and Latin, and a tablet representing an eagle perched on an uncrowned harp, beneath which are two hands representing America and Ireland in a firm clasp of friendship. The Gaelic inscription was composed by a famous churchman of the last century, Right Reverend John England, Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Charleston, S. C., and the English and Latin inscriptions by two eminent New York lawyers, Gulian C. Verplanck and John Duer, respectively. The inscriptions are as follows:

Thomas Addis Emmet was the elder brother of the immortal Robert Emmet, and was born in Cork in 1764 and died in New York in 1827. During his comparatively short career in this country, he achieved great distinction as a lawyer and served as Attorney-General for the State of New York. In such esteem was he held, that on the day of his funeral, Congress, as well as the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York, adjourned in respect of his memory, and committees of both Houses of the National Legislature, of the New York Legislature, the Governors of several States, the Mayor and City officials marched in solemn procession, at a funeral that was a remarkable demonstration of the affection in which he was held by the American people.

Dr. MacNeven, his fellow patriot of the Rebellion of 1798, was a noted physician and scientist and is known to history as the "Father of American Chemistry." The inscriptions on his monument are as follows:

On the front panel, the following inscription from the pen of Gulian C. Verplanck:

WILLIAM JAMES MACNEVEN, M.D.,
Born in Ireland, March 21, A.D. 1763.
Died in New York, July 12, A.D. 1841.

Who, in the cause of his native land,
Sacrificed the bright prospects of his youth,
And passed years in poverty and exile,
Till in America he found a Country
Which he loved as truly as he did
The land of his birth.

To the service of this country which
Had received him as a son
He devoted his high scientific acquirements
With eminent ability.

On the north panel the inscription continues:—

A professor of chemistry in the Medical schools of this city
He was one of the first and ablest
Teachers in America

Of those discoveries and doctrines
Which raised chemistry into a science
And prepared it for future illimitable extension.

His calm deportment and habitual prudence
Covered the warmest and most generous affections,
Shown as well in the relations of private life
As in his ardent Patriotism, alike toward
The country of his birth
And that of his adoption.

On the rear panel is an Irish inscription, by John O'Mahony, as follows:

"In the same churchyard also, "writes Dr. Morgan Dix, rector and historian of Trinity, "rest the bones of another native of Ireland, who, if he has no memorial shaft to perpetuate his name and deeds, did more for the practical benefit of his fellowmen and more for the future prosperity of New York than any other who sleeps in the enclosure. This was Christopher Colles,[14] to whom the City of New York was indebted for its first water works and the State for the Erie Canal. It was this busy inventor and tireless thinker who first conceived the idea of uniting the waters of the Great Lakes to the Hudson, who lectured on the subject here and addressed successive legislatures and who inspired DeWitt Clinton to put his shoulder to the wheel and push the project to its accomplishment." [15]

Colles settled in New York in the year 1772. On the outbreak of the Revolution, he promptly sided with the patriot cause and was appointed "instructor of gunnery" to New York artillery, and one of his descendants relates that "Colles was chased by British soldiers after Washington's evacua-

[14] His cousin, James Colles, was buried in Trinity, and his great-grandniece, Mrs. Emily Johnston DeForest of New York, says Christopher was born in Dublin on May 9, 1739. He was educated in Kilkenny and came to this country in the year 1771. He is mentioned frequently in New York public records, both City and State.

tion in 1776 and hid under the tall grass among the gravestones in Trinity churchyard, where the grenadiers vigorously prodded about with their bayonets but did not succeed in touching him." The New York historian, John Austin Stevens, says: "All of the authorities concur in giving to Colles the credit of having been not only the first to propose, but the first to bring before the public, in a practical form, the feasibility and vast national advantage of a system of water communication, which should unite the Great Lakes and their boundless tributary territory with the Atlantic Ocean." [16] And according to Henry O'Reilly, the builder of the first telegraph line in the world, it was the ingenious brain of Christopher Colles that first conceived a semaphore telegraph system for the United States, when in the year 1812 he made "formal public proposal for telegraphic intercourse along the whole American coast from Passamaquoddy (Maine) to New Orleans." [17]

His public addresses, pamphlets, articles in the newspapers and memorials to such bodies as the Legislature and Chamber of Commerce show the remarkable qualities of his mind. But, he was too far "ahead of his time," so his genius was not fully recognized, and in the later years of his life he contrived to eke out a scanty support by lectures on various philosophical subjects. "In the last days of his life," writes John Austin Stevens, "his friend, John Pintard,[18] who, careless of himself, was a general and constant benefactor of needy worth, secured him an appointment by the American Academy of Fine Arts as keeper of their valuable collection. Their rooms were in the New York Institution, the name given to the old Alms House in Chambers Street when it was set apart for the accommodation of the literary and scientific societies of the City. Here he died on the 4th day of October, 1816, in the 79th year of his age, and hence he was carried on Sunday afternoon, the 6th, at 5 o'clock, to his grave in St. Paul's cemetery. Thus in poverty closed a life which was one of unbroken devotion to the interests of humanity, yet no stone marks the spot where lie his remains. In the ancient cemetery of St. Paul's the busy crowds which throng Broadway observe with unfading interest the monuments erected to Montgomery, Emmet and McNeven, all of the brilliant race of which Colles was in another walk of life a no less distinguished representative. A memorial shaft should recall the inestimable services rendered by Christopher Colles to the State of New York and the country at large."

The entry of his burial in the records of Trinity Parish is as follows: "Name—Christopher Collis; age—79 years; when buried—Oct. 6, 1816; where buried—St. Paul's." [19] While Dr. Dix says "his grave is in the center of the churchyard," it cannot be located, and since there is no stone marking the spot, the assumption is that his remains were placed in the grave or vault of one of his friends, and the only memorial of him in the City of which he was such a distinguished citizen is his portrait by Jarvis at the New York Historical Society. Monument and shaft tell the story of three of these distinguished "Exiles from Erin," and the thousands who pass on Broadway every day can read for themselves of the patriotism of Montgomery, of the civic virtues of Emmet and of the eminence of MacNeven, but there is no stone to extol the achievements of Christopher Colles! John Flavell Mines, a famous raconteur of the last century, who wrote under the pseudonym, "Felix Oldboy," in his book entitled Walks in our Churchyards, makes some references to "this famous quartette whose records shed lustre on the churchyard." He says "Colles' tombstone is an humble one, for he passed away in poverty and yet no man possessed more friends when living or did more for the land and City in which he lived." Mines was unquestionably mistaken, however, in his reference to this "tombstone," for there is no record at the Vestry House that any such stone was ever raised to the memory of Colles, nor, as already stated, can the spot where he was buried be located.

There is an entry of the burial of James Gilliland in St. Paul's churchyard, under date of September 23, 1777. He was a native of the village of Caddy, County Armagh, Ireland, and is first mentioned as a private tutor to a New York family in the year 1766. In 1770 he established a school in Broad Street and in one of his advertisements in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of June 3, 1771, "James Gilliland, Writing-Master, Accountant and Teacher of the Mathematics in Broad Street," returned "his grateful thanks to the Public for the Encouragement he has received since he commenced Teaching and begs to assure them that he will use every means in his Power to forward the Education of the Youth committed to his Care." He was a brother of William Gilliland of New York, a man whose name is writ large in the history of the Champlain Valley, and whose written Journal shows that it was he who suggested to Colonel Ethan Allen the capture of Fort Ticonderoga in the year 1775.[20]

Patrick McConnigal, who appears in the burial records as of July 27, 1777, was a resident of New York for many years and his marriage to Ann or Hannah Kennedy on March 26, 1757, is on record at Trinity Church. In a power of attorney recorded at the Register's office,[21] dated July 14, 1757, evidently prior to his departure on a voyage, he authorized his wife "to receive all monies, debts, rents, goods, wares, dues, accounts and other demands whatsoever payable to him," and in this document he is described as "Patrick McConegall of the City of New York, Mariner," but according to an advertisement in 1770 he was then in business as a "Ship Chandler on the New Dock."

In St. Paul's churchyard there is a stone over the grave of Thomas Roach, who died on St. Patrick's Day in the year 1795 in his 68th year, and of his wife, who died in January, 1796. This Thomas Roach was master of a merchant vessel plying between New York and the West Indies, and accounts in the newspapers show that he also traded frequently with European ports. In 1772 he was president of the Marine Society of New York, an organization comprised mainly of merchants and sea-captains, and his name is also listed among the members of the General Society of Tradesmen and Mechanics and of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick. One of his descendants informs me that "Captain Roach was a handsome looking Irishman of powerful build," and there is a tradition in the family that during one of his voyages to the Carribean Sea he was attacked by pirates who boarded his vessel, but after a desperate struggle Roach and his men repulsed the attack and brought the pirate captain to New York, where he was condemned and executed. At Trinity Church, under date of January 4, 1778, there is a record of the marriage of Captain Thomas Roach and Eupheme Ogden, daughter of a prominent New York merchant, and many other people named Roach or Roche appear in New York records of the eighteenth century, especially in the parish registers of Trinity Church.

The names of several Irish sea-captains appear on headstones in Trinity churchyard. One inscription says the stone was erected "In Memory of Capt John Daley of New London who died May 31st 1774 in the 34th year of his age." Another says that "Eliza Ann daug^{t} of Capt Daniel & Ann Coyle died July 13th 1804 Ag^{d} 7 m 9 days," and "Sophia Comerford, wife of Michael Comerford of the Island of Grenada, died July 14th 1801." Captain Michael Comerford was master of a vessel plying between New York and the West Indies. Still another stone says that "William Carberry died Nov 10th 1797, aged 62 years—Elizabeth died Aug 5th, 1816." The inscription on the stone over the grave of Captain Thomas Carberry says he "died June 6th, 1819, aged 57 years," and the same stone records the death of "Mary, wife of Thomas Carberry," on "February 6th 1820, aged 56 years." Thomas Carberry is also recorded as the owner of a pew in St. Paul's chapel. He was a member of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in 1812, at which time he was a "shipmaster" with an office at 79 Greenwich Street. Other burials in Trinity were "Elizabeth Carberry, aged 14," on August 7, 1816, and "James Carberry, aged 29," on February 15, 1818, and according to Onderdonk's Annals of New- town, Elizabeth was "the daughter of Captain Thomas Carberry of New York," and that on August 5, 1816, she and two servants of the Carberry household were "drowned at Rockaway Beach while bathing in the surf."

A stone in Trinity churchyard over the grave of James Woods, a refugee from Ireland after the failure of the Rebellion of 1798, commemorates his patriotism in crude verse. The inscription is as follows:

"James Woods, a Native of Ireland, who died June 3d, 1801
aged 46 years
Unseen to Mankind's view
An exile of Old Erin true
His principles was just and good
And for his country's freedom stood."

Perhaps the most interesting of the inscriptions in Trinity is that which appears on the Soldiers' Monument, commemorating the American officers and soldiers of the Revolution who died in captivity in the old "Sugar House" and who were interred in Trinity churchyard. The inscription on the monument is as follows:

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF the brave and good men who died
Whilst imprisoned in this City for their devotion To the Cause of AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

The "Sugar House" of infamous memory stood in Crown (now Liberty) Street and was one of the nine jails used by the British in New York during the Revolution for the detention of military prisoners, and a statement in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury of November 5, 1776, said "there are now 5000 prisoners in town, many of them half naked." No list of the Revolutionary soldiers who died in the Sugar House, and whose remains were interred in Trinity churchyard, is now available. But, since we know that among the American troops who fought at the battle of Long Island (August 28, 1776) and at the siege of Fort Washington (November 16, 1776) there were several regiments whose muster-rolls show a large proportion of Irishmen,[22] and as the prisoners captured in these fights were divided between the prison ship, Jersey, and the Sugar House, it is certain that many of the American prisoners buried in Trinity were of the Irish Race.

There is another monument in Trinity, erected by the "Exempt Firemen of Engine 42," to the memory of six New York firemen, two of whom were Lieutenant Timothy King, "killed May 31, 1862, at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va.," and John S. O'Donnell, "killed April 26, 1854."

Many married women besides those mentioned are recorded in the "Register of Burials" at various times in the eighteenth century, with no reference to their baptismal names or of their husbands, and concerning whom no other record can be found. Among those buried in Trinity churchyard there are so recorded:

"Mrs. Bradey"	"Mrs. Kernes"	"Mrs. McKeown"
"Mrs. Brodie"	"Mrs. Kerney"	"Mrs. McNeale"
"Mrs. Carey"	"Mrs. Logan"	"Mrs. Moore"
"Mrs. Dowland"	"Mrs. Magraw"	"Mrs. Morrison"
"Mrs. Devereux"	"Mrs. McCann"	"Mrs. Powers"
"Mrs. Higgins"	"Mrs. McCleese"	"Mrs. Tobin"
"Mrs. Keeler"	"Mrs. McCullen"	"Mrs. Tully"

There are also during this same period, in the burial records of Trinity Parish, similarly abbreviated entries of men, and in these cases, because of the frequency of entries in New York records of men bearing the same surnames, it is impracticable at this time to identify them all. Among these, there are recorded the burials of:

"Mr. Brannon"	"Mr. Henegan"	"Mr. McCoy"
"Mr. Buckley"	"Mr. Higgins"	"Mr. McDoland"
"Mr. Cockran"	"Mr. Kane"	"Mr. McDonald"

The eighteenth century newspapers mention several people bearing such names, and it is reasonable to suppose that these were the persons who were recorded in the burial registers of Trinity parish, without their given names. "Mr. Cockran" probably was the William Cochran from Tyrone, Ireland, mentioned elsewhere as master of the Columbia College grammar school; "Mr. Coffee, age 49," who was buried in Trinity on July 12, 1801, may have been the [24] Prendergast.

Patrick Coffey who conducted a private school in Nassau Street in 1784 and for several years thereafter; there was a schoolmaster named John Kearns in New York, and it is probable that the "Mrs. Kernes" above listed was his wife; "Mr. Doran," doubtless, was Captain Thomas Doran, at whose house in Water Street the "Marine Society of New York" used to meet as early as 1770, since he was the only one of the name on record; Delaney is assumed to have been John W. Delaney, a New York merchant, and "Mrs. Bradey" was the wife of James Brady, whose marriage is on record as of November 21, 1786. Grace McQuaid is assumed to have been the wife of Robert McQuaid, a dry goods merchant in Water Street in 1780; there was a Dennis McReady, a vendue master and tobacconist, who on May 10, 1773, announced in Gaine's paper that he "has removed his Tobacco Manufactory from Horse and Cart Street to the lower end of Wall Street." He was a very extensive advertiser in the local papers. He was a native of Ireland and was the father of Andrew, Hugh, James and William, all four of whom were members of "The General Society of Tradesmen and Mechanics" in 1792. Their names are recorded variously McCready and McReady, and William McCready is mentioned several times in the newspapers of the last half of the eighteenth century as a New York merchant, and his burial in St. Paul's churchyard was recorded under date of August 10, 1814.

Mark Mullen advertised as a "tobacconist at 19 Water Street" in 1781; one "Edward Moran, Taylor and Habit-Maker from Dublin," so advertised his business at 43 Water Street in 1786; there was a "Bryan Conner, auctioneer in Water Street by the Fly Market," whose many advertisements in the papers all through the last quarter of the eighteenth century indicate him to have been an important factor in the business life of the City; a John Barry was in business "on Cruger's Wharf" in 1780, and in the same year Thomas McMullen kept a "tavern and oyster-house close by the Fresh Water Pump." While, as already stated, it is difficult to identify those who were recorded without their given names, there can be very little doubt that those here mentioned were the persons who were recorded in the burial registers of Trinity Parish.

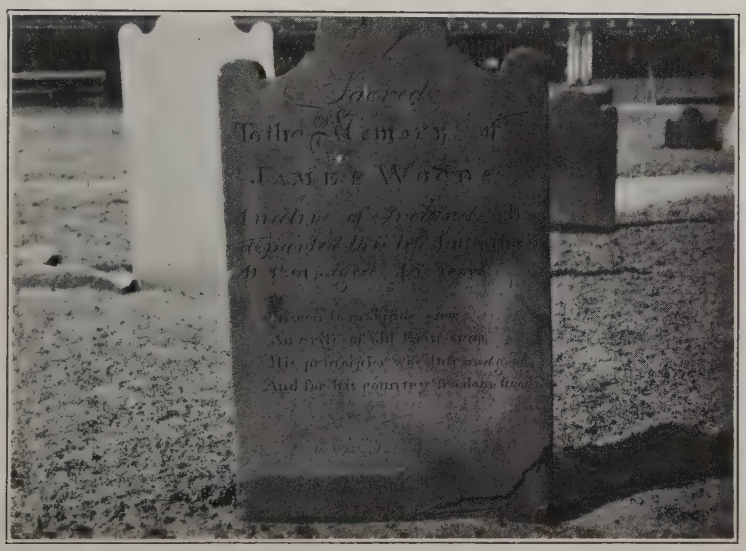
There can be no doubt also that many women of Irish descent were buried in these churchyards, but who cannot be identified because of their married names. A case in point is that of Ann Carroll, born in 1742, who was married at Trinity Church to Barnabas Dorman on August 14, 1769. The records of the Surrogate's Court show that she died in 1777, and the entry of her burial in Trinity churchyard on May 20th of that year reads simply: "Mrs. Dorman, age 35." With the burial register alone as a guide, no one would recognize "Mrs. Dorman" as the daughter of an Irishman, and since women of obvious Irish descent are shown in the appended lists as having been married in New York to men of English, Scotch, French, Dutch and German origin, it is clear there must have been many cases similar to that of Ann (Carroll) Dorman.

Appended hereto are exact copies of some of the inscriptions in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards. There are many other names in the "Register of Burials," which, although common among Irish families for centuries, are not included herein, though it is not at all unlikely that some of these people were Irish. To refer to a single example. One Robert Patton was buried in Trinity churchyard on May 12, 1788, but the name would be excluded from those listed herein were it not for the following account of his death, published in the New York Packet of May 13, 1788:

"Died on Thursday morning in this City, Mr. Robert Patton, Door-Keeper to the United States in Congress assembled, in the 84th year of his age. He was a native of Ireland. In an early stage of life he came to America and had resided in the United States upwards of sixty years. In May, 1775, his well known reputation as a man of integrity and patriotism procured him the appointment under Congress, in which he continued until his death, a period of thirteen years." There is a stone in Trinity with an inscription recording the death on June 8, 1816, of "John Patten, a native of County Down, Ireland."

There is also appended hereto a list of names of persons recorded in the marriage registry as having been married in Trinity church, as well as certain entries extracted from the existing baptismal registers of the parish. And when considering them it should be borne in mind that the parish records for approximately sixty years were destroyed by fire, and although numerous Irishmen and Irishwomen appear in the records that still remain, obviously the number is far short of the total number of Irish people whose names were entered in the original records of Trinity Parish. This statement is supported by the "Marriage Bonds" on file at the State Capitol which were collected and published in 1860 by Gideon J. Tucker, Secretary of State. This list contains 848 Irish names, and a comparison of it with the existing marriage registers discloses numerous instances of Irishmen and women who are identifiable as residents of New York, but who do not appear at all in the records of Trinity or other New York churches. And since the same naturally would apply to the burials, whose records for many years were destroyed, it follows that the names of those herein listed as having been buried in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards also fall short of the total number.



James Woods — 1801
A refugee from Ireland after the Rebellion of 1798.

The parish records of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church have been reproduced by the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society, and here may be seen the names of many Irish people, and sons and daughters of Irish immigrants, who were married in that church to descendants of the early Dutch settlers, or whose children were baptized therein. Similar records of the First and Second Presbyterian Churches of New York, for the second half of the eighteenth century, are also in the custody of that society, and these contain 156 entries of marriages, and 149 baptisms of children, of people of Irish descent. At the Surrogate's office in the Hall of Records, there are recorded 146 wills of Irish residents of the City and County of New York, and the total number of Irish names appearing among the executors, legatees and witnesses to wills executed in New York, and administrators appointed by the Surrogates, at various times in the eighteenth century, is shown to be 765.

At the State Capitol the rolls of the New York troops who fought in the French-English war, 1755-1763, are on file and exact copies of them have been published by the New York Historical Society.[24a] These rolls, in many instances, give the name, age, occupation and country of nativity of each man, with the date of enlistment and the name of his company commander. Of the total number of men, 1291 are shown to have been "born in Ireland"! In comparatively few cases the places of their birth in Ireland are recorded, but of these we find Antrim, Cork, Down, Dublin, Galway, Kerry, Kilkenny, Limerick, Longford, Londonderry, Sligo, Tipperary, Tyrone and Waterford, and, as in the case of the church and other records before referred to, the majority of the surnames indicate descent from old Irish families. Many of these men were recruited in the City of New York, but it is not now possible to identify them all.

At the Register's office there are on file 676 legal instruments, consisting of deeds and conveyances, mortgages, assignments, leases, contracts, bonds, powers of attorney and other instruments, many of them covering transactions in New York real estate, in which people of Irish blood are recorded among the interested parties. The Irish names recorded at the Surrogate's and Register's offices run generally from the first decade of the eighteenth century to the year 1800, and when in addition to the foregoing figures, the Irish names that appear in the "Minutes of the Meetings of the Common Council," the "Poll Lists," the rolls of the Revolutionary troops and sundry other historical collections relating to the City of New York, are considered, we are able to form some idea of the large Irish emigrations to New York during the period referred to.

Lists of the names obtained from some of these sources will be found in the Appendix. As a rule, statistics such as names, dates, etc., have no appeal for the average person; usually, they are regarded as dry and uninteresting reading and consequently very little attention is paid to them. Yet, in the present instance, if readers of this book will glance at these lists they will be afforded an opportunity to understand how far historical writers have gone in their efforts to keep the Irish out of American history.

In comparatively few cases only is there any mention of the nationality of these people in the public records, but it is assumed that no one will seriously question the racial origin of people bearing such names as those included in these lists. However, the chief significance of it all is not so much the great number of people who came from Ireland and settled in New York, but that they were mostly of ancient Irish stock, thus disproving the assertions of historical writers that the immigrants from Ireland to the American Colonies were the so-called "Scotch-Irish" only.

There is evidence that some of these writers had an ulterior purpose in designating the Irish immigrants "Scotch-Irish," but since this feature of the subject has been dealt with elsewhere,[25] it will not be entered into here. Except, perhaps to say that American citizens of Irish blood seriously object to this racial designation. Heretofore, its use has been permitted without proper protest, but as long as there is a means of developing the facts the Irish in America will resist all attempts to deprive their people of the credit they are entitled to in American history. Let each racial element stand in its own record, be it good or bad, but neither the Scots nor the English should be permitted to appropriate the creditable record of the Irish and "get away with it" as easily as they have in the past. While these two elements contributed more than any others to the Tory ranks in the Revolution, the great bulk of the Irish stood steadfastly by the patriot cause.

Other fruitful sources of information are the newspapers published in the City of New York. In these papers there are references to a vast number of Irish-named people at various times throughout the eighteenth century, either in the news columns or the advertisements, and perhaps nothing more strikingly indicates the racial character of the Irish emigrants to New York than the advertisements which appeared regularly in these papers covering undelivered letters at the Post Office. Prior to the Revolution, the Post Office was in a little one-story building in Stone Street, where people had to call for their mail because for some years there was no mail carrier, and in the case of uncalled for letters the postmaster made up weekly lists of the addresses, which were printed in the newspapers under the head of "Letters remaining in the Post Office at New York." Many pages could be filled with the Irish names that appear in these lists, but, in order to illustrate the point, I am showing only the names of certain persons, listed in these advertisements in the years 1769, 1772, 1773 and 1775. For example, in the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury in the year 1769, we find among those to whom letters were addressed at New York:

The question has been raised by some persons having only a superficial knowledge of history: "If it be true that such large numbers of Irish came to New York in the eighteenth century, where are their living descendants and why is there not a greater proportion of Irish names among old New York families?" While at first thought that may seem to be a fair enough question, a complete answer cannot be given. A partial answer is found in the large percentage of children who are numbered among the burials in Trinity and St. Paul's churchyards, and another curious fact is noticed, namely, that the proportion of females born to Irish parents or to families where the male parent only was Irish, far exceeded the males,[26] and thus, in course of time as a result of intermarriages with people of other racial stocks, their identity became lost. In numerous cases names became changed, especially by the dropping of the distinctive Irish prefixes, "Mac" and "O", and through other name transformations.

Indeed, this matter of the transformation of Irish names in America is a factor of the utmost importance in arriving at a true understanding of the racial elements comprising our American population. Then, in the case of many other Irish families the male line died out or their descendants moved away and are now scattered all over the Continent; and what with changes in religion and environment, the descendants of the early Irish settlers eventually became so absorbed in the general mass of the population, that today many of them cannot be identified as having sprung from any particular racial stock. They are often improperly regarded as "of English descent," sometimes because of the ignorance of historical writers of the origin of Irish names and their assumption that when a person bears an apparently English name he must, necessarily, be of "English" origin.

While it is probable that most of the Irish who came to [26] The appended list of baptisms at Trinity church shows that 70% of the children were females.

New York in the eighteenth century were of the laboring and artisan class, yet, from the references I have made to those appearing in the public records, it is seen that many of them rose above their original status and ranked with the substantial business men of the City. And it is clear also from the marriage and other records that some of them stood as high in the social scale as their fellow citizens of Dutch and English descent who receive such prominent mention by the historians, and at the Surrogate's office, among entries covering wills, letters of administration and other documents relating to the disposition of the estates of deceased persons, men and women bearing old Irish names are recorded with remarkable frequency. And the many deeds and conveyances and other legal instruments recorded at the Register's office, already alluded to, indicate that the transactions in which some of these people figured were quite important from the standpoint of the extent and value of the interests involved.[27]

Yet, the Irish have been passed over in silence by historians, and if we were to accept without question the work of the average historian as a truthful relation of the facts, we would be compelled to believe that none but people of Dutch and English blood comprised the early population of New York. To compile a history of the City of New York without first consulting the early records, would be like "playing Hamlet without the Ghost," and even assuming that historical writers did actually examine these records, their work shows little indication that they considered them when arriving at conclusions as to the racial composition of the people of the City in the eighteenth century. They give their opinions freely enough, but logically, what the people want in historical writings are the facts. But, if opinions are to be put forward at all, the concrete facts of history should also be cited, so that readers could form their own conclusions. One-sided historians of this character usually are the most quoted and often are the main reliance of school-teachers, college professors and other commentators on history.

Possibly, the idea at the back of their heads was, that because Ireland was under English rule and was considered part of the British Empire, the Irish are not entitled to separate mention in American histroy. We know it was that sort of "reasoning" that influenced some of the minor historical writers, and even yet we read occasionally of an Irish man or Irish woman, distinguished in some one of life's spheres, who is referred to as "English" in the public prints. This idea is also reflected in some of the histories of the American Revolution, wherein we are told that it was "a conflict between Englishmen on the one hand and Englishmen on the other." While the truth is, that if the majority of the English colonists had had their way and the political destinies of the country had been permitted to remain in their hands, there would have been no uprising of the people in 1775, and in all likelihood we would still be a crown colony of England. When the Irish officers and soldiers of the Revolution are not assumed to have been "English," they are called "Scotch-Irish," and if the average historian is to be believed, the pioneers who blazed the path of civilization through the wilderness, almost invariably were of "the Anglo-Saxon Race"! The tens of thousands of Irish pioneers whose names, and sometimes their deeds, appear in the colonial records have been studiously ignored!

Ireland gave to New York, at one period or another, such prominent citizens as Thomas Dongan, Anthony Duane,

John and William Kelly, Thomas and Anthony Lynch, Michael and Philip Kearny, Daniel McCormick, William Constable, Hercules Mulligan, Alexander McComb, William Mooney, Dominick Lynch, Hugh Gaine, Samuel Loudon, Christopher Colles and many others, lawyers, doctors, merchants, journalists, manufacturers and other business men, who flourished here in the eighteenth century and held their own in social and business affairs with leading men of other races. And in later years there came from Ireland such men as Cornelius Heeney, John McVickar, Michael Hogan, John Haggerty, Carlisle Pollock, James McBride, William O'Brien, Thomas Addis Emmet and Dr. William James MacNeven, who shone in the brightest circles of the society of their day and whose names are interwoven with the City's history of the first quarter of the nineteenth century. Interesting references to all of these may be found in Barrett's Old Merchants of New York.

But, that Ireland also gave many of her educated sons to America, at a time when the country needed men of that stamp, is the most significant factor in the value of the early Irish emigrations to the Colonies. Great numbers of Irish schoolmasters came to America in the eighteenth century, and like other sections, New York profited by their advent in this City. As early as 1704 Thomas Flynn was tutor to the children of the Dutch burghers at his little school at "No. 5 in Windmill Lane," afterwards call Leary Street and later changed to its present name, Cortlandt Street, and when he announced the opening of his school in that year he expressed the hope that it was "not too far up town"! Miles Reilly was a "tutor and linguister" in New York in 1734; Cornelius Lynch and James Magrath had private schools in Stone and Dock Streets respectively in 1740; Edward Fogarty and James Carroll kept schools in Wall Street after 1766; James Farrell and James Gilliland in Broad Street; Patrick Coffey in Nassau Street; James Foley in Duke Street; James O'Brien in Horse and Cart Street, now that part of William south of Wall, and James Barry had a "classical school" in Golden Hill (John Street). Two of the teachers in charge of the "Charity School" maintained by Trinity Church during the greater part of the eighteenth century, Revds. Thomas Colgan and Richard Charlton, were natives of Ireland. And after the Revolution, that is between 1784 and 1798, there are records of New York schoolmasters named:

Brennan	Duffy	Joyce	O'Brien
Burke	Finnegan	Madden	O'Connor
Carney	Gahagan	McDonald	Piggot
Connolly	Gillespie	McDoniel	Reilly
Conroy	Heffernan	McKiernan	Sweeney

Nearly all of these were private tutors whose schools were located in the present downtown portion of the City, and whose names are an obvious indication of their nationality. Several of the Irish schoolmasters to whom New York youths were indebted for their early training were graduates of Trinity College, Dublin. Robert Harper, a native of Ireland, who was a professor at Kings (now Columbia) College between 1761 and 1776, is referred to as "one of the most distinguished educators in the Province." Dr. Samuel Clossey, or Clohissey, "a clever Irish surgeon and a graduate of Trinity College," [28] became "Professor of Natural Philosophy at Kings College" in 1765, and when Alexander Hamilton pursued the higher studies at that institution he "studied medicine under the learned Dr. Clossey." [29] William Cochran, an Irishman, master of the grammar school at Columbia College, is credited in history as the tutor of the celebrated Virginia statesman, John Randolph of Roanoke, and in 1784 when he hired an assistant, he announced that he had "secured the services of George Wright, an Irishman and a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin." There can be no doubt that some of these Irish schoolmasters were buried in Trinity or St. Paul's churchyard, but the absence of the records precludes our securing any information on that point.

This short account of the New York Irish of the eighteenth century, who found their final resting places in two of our historic cemeteries, in itself indicates that the Race was represented here in large numbers, and that fact alone justifies the assertion that the Irish must have had some part in the work of cementing the foundations upon which our wonderful city was built. When all of the foregoing data are considered, and we fail to find the slightest mention of the Irish in our standard histories, it is not to be wondered at that American descendants of Irish immigrants take umbrage at historians who have denied to the Race a place in the American Pantheon. It is evident that some such organization as the American Irish Historical Society is sorely needed, to the end that the Irish Chapter in American history shall be written and that the Race shall be accorded the credit to which it is entitled.

The story of the Irish pioneers, not only in New York but in other Colonies, furnishes an interesting contribution to American history, although, in the search for information, one who works alone in this field is sometimes hampered by the paucity of fact relating to individual persons. Of a great many of the New York Irish who appear in the public records, no information at all seems to be obtainable beyond the mere mention of their names. But, even though they are lost to history, their names stand in the records as a silent rebuke to the historians who suppressed the fact that people of Irish birth and blood were settled in New York long before the establishment of the Republic. Although the Irish came to this country in vast numbers and many of them were conspicuous in the pioneer work of colonial days, neither they nor their descendants seem to have had the faculty of putting themselves on record, to the extent that people of other Races did. This has worked greatly to the disadvantage of later generations. Yet, despite this neglect, there is sufficient evidence obtainable to prove that they were an important factor in the colonial population.

What a great pity it is that the Irish who came here in later years did not long ere this collect the records of these old New York families of their race and blood, and publish their story to the world. While the Irish in America have been crying aloud for someone to unearth the facts and write the history of their people in this country, while they recognize the great necessity for such work as an offset to that of the pro-English historians, they waste their time on matters of far less interest and importance and give scant encouragement to those who are giving their time and their substance to the work of research. They seem to be willing to support anything but that which will advance the credit of the Race in America. And a sad part of it is, that the poorest supporters of such work are those who have been blessed with more than a sufficiency of this world's goods, but who seem to lack that sense of pride in their ancestry that is exhibited by Americans of other racial origins!

OTHER BAPTISMS PERFORMED BY REV. JOHN OGILVIE, RECTOR OF TRINITY PARISH

The rector of Trinity Parish occasionally visited the settlements outside the City to baptize the children, and on his return to New York they were recorded in the baptismal registers of Trinity Church. These records show, what however we already know from other sources, that many Irish families were settled in various parts of the Province of New York during the eighteenth century, but, an interesting point about these entries is, that in a number of instances the Irish names would be unobtainable were it not for the fact that the mother's maiden name in each case is shown in the baptismal register.

The following entries are taken from the "Register of Baptisms of Trinity Church," all covering baptisms performed by Rev. John Ogilvie between the years 1749 and 1764, but if any similar records were kept by other rectors of Trinity, they must have been destroyed by fire since they do not now exist. These baptisms were performed at Albany, Schenectady and other places in the Mohawk Valley. The names serve as an illustration of the way in which the Irish assimilated with people of other races, and why it is now practically impossible to make a reliable estimate of the proportion of the population that is descended from the Irish or from any of the other racial elements among the early settlers. Two separate lists are appended, one including the baptisms of children of Irish male parents or of an Irish father, and, the other covering those cases where the mothers were of Irish descent, as indicated by their maiden names.

OTHER IRISH NAMES APPEARING IN THE BAPTISMAL RECORDS OF TRINITY CHURCH

Further evidence as to the early settlement in the City of New York of large numbers of Irish people, is afforded by the records of certain christenings at Trinity Church, where the names of the sponsors are entered in the baptismal register. In many of these cases, although the principals do not appear to have been Irish, it is clear the sponsors were people of Irish birth or origin, and among these the following are noted:
